

The November Elections.

Of the numerous States which held elections on last Tuesday we are unable to give any satisfactory statement, for the reason that the returns come in so slow.

In Massachusetts Butler is defeated by a small majority. The vote was the largest ever polled in the State, there being nearly 60,000 more votes cast than at the election one year ago.

In Virginia Mahoneism received its death blow and the Old Dominion is again Democratic by an overwhelming majority.

In New York the State officers elected are Secretary of State, Attorney General and State Treasurer. Dennis O'Brien, the Democratic candidate for Attorney General and Maxwell, State Treasurer, are both elected by hand-some majorities.

Pennsylvania is claimed to have gone Republican by about 20,000.

In Maryland, McLean, the Democratic candidate for Governor, and the entire Democratic ticket is elected by a large majority.

In Mississippi the regular Democratic ticket met with but little opposition.

In Minnesota Hubbard is re-elected Governor and the balance of the Republican ticket by a reduced majority.

New Jersey is Democratic by an increased majority. While in most States the issues were principally local and lacked any thing of a national character, the result is satisfactory and encouraging to the Democracy. The vote in the Empire State of New York was unusually heavy and the Democracy have more than held their own.

The Republican press generally and the Oregonian in particular, have been busily engaged ever since the result of the Ohio election became known, in framing excuses for the Republicans losing the State. The latest reason is a novel one, in the form of a communication, in which their loss is attributed to President Arthur.

Watterson on the South.

The popular feature of the banker's association gathering at Louisville, Ky., last week, was Henry Watterson's address. In his little speech last week he spoke of the South, of its condition "befo' de wah," after the "wah," and of the present promising outlook. He said:

The South; the South; it is no problem at all. I thank God that at last we can say with truth it is simply a geographical expression. The whole story of the South may be summed up in the sentence: "She was rich and she lost her riches; she was poor and in bondage; she was set free and she had to go to work; she went to work and is richer than ever before." You see it was a ground hog case. So it was here; the climate was here, but along with it was the curse—the curse of slavery. God passed a rod along the land and smote the people. Then, in His goodness and mercy, He waded the wand of enchantment, and lo, like a flower, His blessing burst forth.

The South never knew what independence meant until she was taught self-reliance—to subdue herself. We lived from hand to mouth—we had our debts and our "niggers." Under the old system we paid our debts and walloped the "niggers." Under the new we pay our "niggers" and walloped our debts.

Mr. Chas. M. Holt, editor of the Yakima Record, and one Adams of the Yakima Signal are firing extras at each other. Mr. Holt should not hunt snipe with a mountain hooter.

The Wool Question.

The Oregonian, following the lead of the Standard, is trying to make its readers believe that the double dealing of Congress with the wool question has nothing to do with the price the producers are receiving for their wool. It might as well try to make the consumer believe that the increase of tariff on the manufactured goods has nothing to do with the merchant charging him two dollars and a half for twenty cents worth of wool woven into an undershirt, as to tell the farmer that the reduction of the tariff on wool has nothing to do with the reduced price he gets for his wool.

The Lilliputian Dude that runs the Standard (and claims to be a Democrat but isn't), in Wednesday's issue calls us a liar and nigger and says we have as much wool in our teeth as the poor little dude editor has on his head, but will not resort to the same practice that it did to scold it off. When driven to the extreme of calling liar and nigger at the distance of two hundred miles, it is easy to determine the merits of the controversy. It is not our fault that the Standard is owned and controlled by a Republican, but it should not attempt to sail under false colors and then turn son-of-a-bitch on all political questions whenever its boss pulls the puppet strings. It makes the poor little dude editor look like the organ grinder's monkey, exhibiting himself on the adjoining lamp post.

Gen. Wm. T. Sherman.

By the act of Congress fixing the age at 60 for the retirement of the officers of the army from active service on half pay for the remainder of their days, Gen. Sherman retires and Gen. Phil Sheridan succeeds him as General of the armies. Sheridan is still a young man and with his iron constitution bids fair to hold the position for many years. Gen. Sherman's well preserved and in case of war would be able to render his country good service in the field. He is known to be ambitious and as he has for years been spoken of as a probable candidate for President, now that he is relieved from military cares may tarnish the luster of his military career in the cesspool of politics.

The trait to which the Republican party are driven by the loss of Ohio, will in all probability cause many of the leaders to seek to hide the iniquities of their party behind the General's personal popularity, and with his known ambition and Othello's occupation gone, he may yet be tempted by the glamour of the Presidency and before many months become a live candidate for the nomination.

He, like all other great generals who have won their triumphs on the field of battle, where their command is absolute law are unsuited to rule in a republic where the ruler and the people are upon the same level plane of equality. Were it possible for him to reach the Presidency his past record would necessarily suffer from the contempt into which his administration would fall, no less than has that of Gen. Grant, by his failures as a civil ruler.

The Republican party has discovered 35,958 new pensioners of the late war. The longer that party remains in power and the farther we get away from the war, the greater the increase of pensioners.
