SNAKE AND BIRD.

A Remakable Contest Between a Partridge and a Black Snake.

Whether or not it is scientifically true that snakes ever charm birds, it is true that birds sometimes attack and klll snakes. An account is given in the Indianapolis People of an exciting contest of this kind, in which a partridge was the victor. It happened in Preston, the bushes, and saw a hen partridge

But he was too proud to go home. Now, Pompey had long been the mortal foe of Caesar, a hero of the same race, attached to a neighboring gentleman. Many a bloody encounter increased their deadly ha'e; yet victory still remained in suspense. On the morning of the defeat of Pompey that hero was seen taking his way to Cæsar's abode. Cæsar appeared on the lawn, eager to meet his foe, when, to the amazement of the spectators, Pompey, as he approached his rival, held out an olive branch, by every means in his power imploring a reconciliation. Cæsar met his advance. From that plums, 6 % 8c; prunes, 8 @82c; peaches, 13c; moment their animosity ceased.
