GOLD.

In this golden age of our republic, a time when the aristocrats of the east, in order to increase the value of the shining dress which they have wrung from the teeming millions of our laboring people; are seeking by legislative enactments to make gold the single standard of values, to the exclusion of the other precious metals; it behooves us in this sparsely settled mineral region of Oregon to seek the best methods of obtaining the shining treasure which lies hidden beneath almost every foot of our virgin soil. Recent discoveries are making of rich deposits of this precious metal in almost every section of the state and it only requires skill and industry to open up here in Douglas county some of the richest mines the world has ever seen developed.

The productions of gold was a puzzle to the Alchemists of old and they found it beyond the power of all science to produce or manufacture the precious stuff. Yet in those days it was accumulated and prized by the ancients and used as a standard of values from the barbarians of the frozen north to the sunny Archipelago of ancient Greece. From the coral sands of India to the most distant islands of the sea where ever governments were instituted amongst men. From the craggy shores where piratical crews lurked in all their fastness to the gilded cities of ancient Rome it was sought after and prized by the children of men.

Neither history nor mythology goes back of the time when gold was used by mankind as a standard of commercial values. Yet its production or growth has ever remained a mystery. It was once a popular idea amongst the nations of antiquity that in the frozen regions of the north Old Plato poured out great streams of gold from his infernal regions which they popularly supposed to be deep down beneath the surface of the earth. This mythological notion appears to be shared in by some of our geologists and scientists of the present age, who claim that the gold which we find scattered over many portions of this coast was broken off from some imaginary ledge at the North Pole or picked up in some mysterious way by the mighty glaciers which they claim at one time crept over the entire slope from the region of the north, and in its course, ground up and departed the shining dust in its onward march. In point of reason and philosophy the ancients undoubtedly have the best theory. Research and experience have demonstrated that gold grows from its component elements and takes on its form and existence from its mother quartz, and that it is by action of the elements fire and water that it becomes detached and scattered through out the soil and gravel where the experienced miner readily detects its presence. Its presence in the quartz rock is in many cases less easily detected and with more difficulty obtained and when combined with the baser metals which is usually the case in this section proves refractory beyond the skill of our miners to overcome. And for this reason the great belt of mineral bearing quartz which passes through our entire county lies undeveloped and practically unexplored. That many of these quartz veins are rich in the precious metals it requires but little skill to determine but to devise some cheap and efficient method of separating and saving the gold from the base metals with which it is found united has proved the great stumbling block to those who have attempted to work these ores, and proving expensive trials has limited the experiments to but few attempts to reduce these ores and we may say that the entire quartz field for 150 miles in extent is almost entirely unexplored.

The gravels of these creeks and rivers where these veins intersect them for many miles are rich in gold. Here at least is one of the most inviting fields for scientific experiments ever offered to the mineralogist and chemist, and will prove a fortune to him who invents a cheap and efficient method of working these refractory ores.

The extra session has decided a back-set in Judge Webster's decision that the Keady liquor law is constitutional and effective. The whole issue is now brought down to the senatorship and it is too low a political job for any decent man to take any stock in. The people have understood the issue all the time.

If THURMAN would accept the Democratic nomination for Governor of Ohio he would be almost certain to be elected.

THE Prohibition party in Oregon evidently thinks this climate agrees with its constitution. It has come to stay.

Dogs our cotemporary still favor an extra session? The Keady liquor law is declared operative.

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS' ORATION.

George H. Williams was chosen to deliver the oration in Portland at the memorial exercises in commemoration of the great services of General Grant to the country. It was proper enough for Mr. Williams to appear as orator on this occasion. He had been in the cabinet of General Grant and knew the General well and could perhaps give greater satisfaction in the discharge of this office than any other man in Oregon. But the oration delivered plainly shows that the selection made of the orator was unfortunate. Mr. Williams was Attorney General under General Grant and in common with other members of General Grant's cabinet and appointees about Washington suffered exceedingly in spirit from the press; the stamp, and in partisan circles. Without going into the merits of this war of invectives upon the orator we can see plainly that he considered the occasion of General Grant's funeral exercises his opportunity to relieve his mind of the revengeful feeling that has slumbered there for a long time. It was said when Mr. Williams reached the Senate, that he and General Nesmith were favorable to the policy of Andrew Johnson. General Nesmith so understood Mr. Williams and was deceived in his opinion until Mr. Williams delivered his speech on reconstruction. From that time on Mr. Williams became determined even to bitterness in his war upon the South. And during his whole career in the Senate, and as Attorney General he maintained that uncharitable and revengeful policy towards the South that characterized his conduct from first to last. And in his oration he was pleased to have the opportunity to say that "knowing what I do if I had been President I would have made my little finger heavier than the loins of General Grant." This expression reveals the true standing of Mr. Williams among the great men of our nation. He was one of those who did their fighting within the quiet and pleasant retreat of the parlor or in the busy rotunda of some popular hotel. For partisan gain and personal advancement he was willing to sacrifice those principles of justice that characterize the noblest of men whether foes in war or reconciled combatants in peace. At no time had Mr. Williams a high character for statesmanship or ability to represent the spirit of a people who have conquered all their faults in governmental relations and now desire to settle down upon those honorable conditions of peace that should harmonize the elements of our national household. On the contrary he is a mere partisan with all of the low revenges slumbering in his breast that are essential to partisan warfare and partisan degradation. In this atmosphere he lives and even at the grave of really the only great man who stood by him in his day of trial to save him from censure he finds it in his heart while the requiem of rest, peace, and forgiveness filled the ears and hearts of every one, to talk about the "bats and owls of politics," and "barpies of the press," that were no more annoying to General Grant in life, than in death. The dead general now sleeping so peacefully has forgiven all his enemies. He had in contemplation of death strewn the pathway to his own grave with branches of the olive and with emblems of love. The poisoned pen had lost its power. The tongue of the calumniator was paralyzed. The debasing arts of the partisan were all deeply buried. The virtues of the distinguished dead appeared above all that was of earth. The heart of a great people was doing him honor.

The vanquished were among them. They that had been enemies in life were now friends in the dying hours. "The sepulchre was in their garden." The heavens were opened to receive the sweet and grateful fragrance that rose up from the contrite and forgiving heart of a great people. In this hour of our nation's triumph of peace over the bitterness of war; when minute bells and guns all over the land proclaimed the solemn victory; a victory that the death of this great man gave to our people for at his grave a nation was reconciled. There was one revengeful and vindictive voice that lacked the warm impulses of a god-like heart to guide it. That voice was not for peace, not for forgiveness; not for reconciliation. The "little finger" of the man of whose voice we speak, was heavier for prosecution than "Grant's body." In his senatorial career Mr. Williams is entitled to full credit for the prolonged spirit of hatred that existed between the North and South. It is creditable to our nature that this fiendish spirit did not possess the soldiers North or South. It was left to this vindictive partisan to choose the character of Herod in this drama. Well did General Grant say to General Buckner a few days before his death, "I have always contended that if there had been nobody left but the soldiers we would have had peace in a year." What a rebuke these words were to this Mr. Williams the author of the reconstruction measure. These dying utterances of General Grant contain the truth and should consume this Portland orator like a fire. Contrast this attack upon the South with the spirit manifested by southern generals at the funeral of General Grant and in the memorial exercises in the south. That of the confederates is commendable, honorable and American and is founded in their love of their country. That of the "orator" is debasing and despicable. But there is always a ghoul near the grave of the great. One who is too great a pigmy to become the leader of men or armies and too inhuman and trifling to profit by their victories. Is it strange that at the greatest burial scene our nation has ever witnessed there should be this exception.

A Remarkable Escape.

Mrs. Mary A. Dailey, of Tunkhannock, Pa., was afflicted for six years with Astma and Bronchitis, during which time the best physicians could give no relief. Her life was despaired of, until last October she procured a Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, when immediate relief was felt and by continuing its use for a short time she was completely cured, gaining in flesh 50 lbs. in a few months.

Free Trial Bottles of this certain cure of all Throat and Lung Diseases at S. Hamilton's Drug Store. Large Bottles $1.00.

The people of Oregon are decidedly in earnest in their opposition to an extra session. If Governor Moody is not governed entirely by petty politicians he will not reconvene the Legislature. An expenditure in wasteful extravagance of $30,000 of the people's money is not the road to popular favor. Don't be a tool, Governor!

An article on our first page from the Arizona Gazette gives one an insight into a small amount of the good work so far accomplished by the Cleveland administration.

ROSWELL P. FLOWER appears to have the inside track for the gubernatorial nomination on the Democratic ticket in New York. He is a true Democrat.

The leading politicians of the state are of the opinion that the Governor will not call an extra session owing to the opposition of the people.

It is certainly pleasing to notice how strong President Cleveland is with the people. They like his manly courage and independence.

The Ohio Democrats are becoming more hopeful as the contest approaches. They purport making a vigorous campaign.

JUDGE WEBSTER'S decision upholding the Keady liquor law knocks the extra session in the head.

The crops in the Southern States are reported to be greatly above the average.

Cure for Piles.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he has affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a common attendant. Blind, bleeding and itching piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosancho's Pile remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price 50 cents. Address, The Dr. Bosancho Medicine Co., Paqua, O. Sold by Dr. S. Hamilton.

Your letter received. In reply I am happy to say that Parker's Hair Balm did much more for me than you said it would, or than I expected. My hair has not only stopped falling out, but the bald spots are all covered, and all my hair has grown thicker, softer and more lively than it was before my sickness a year ago. Thank you again and again." Extract from letters of Mr. R. M. T. West Fifty-third street, New York.
