CLIMATOLOGY OF ROSEBURG, OREGON, GEOGRAPHICAL FEATURES, SOIL, ETC., OF DOUGLAS COUNTY.

Latitude 43° 13' north, Longitude west of Greenwich 123° 30' west. Above the Sea 511 feet.

The following has been prepared by B. S. Page, Observer Signal Service U. S. A., in charge of the U. S. Signal office at this place, so as to present a comprehensive statement of the climate, not only to the people here, but also for the benefit of the immigrant who may be in search of an equitable climate and a country best with everything to insure large, productive and never failing crops.

ATMOSPHERIC PRESSURE.—The variability of pressure at all seasons depending as it does on the influence of locality is here not subject to those great changes characteristic to so many sections of the country. The normal pressure is 30.067, the highest 30.664, in November 1880 the lowest 29.126 in November 1885, while the highest gradual decline to April when it is usually stationary to October, lowest in September with a rise again to January. The greatest fluctuations occur in November, the least in July and August.

TEMPERATURE.—The range of temperature covering the extremes of 101° in July 85 and 3° in February 84 shows an equable climate when compared with other places where it is not an unrequited excess to have 100° in summer and 30° below zero in winter, yet places situated a range of more than 120° yet places situated on the coast, or on an island in the ocean have not a greater range than 20°. The mean annual temperature is 52° 3', warmest month July 65° 7', coldest January 40° 6', while the mean temperature of the seasons are winter 41° 6', spring 51° 5', summer 64° 1', fall 52° 0'.

In the following table the temperature of Roseburg is shown in comparison with other places.

Table comparing temperature of Roseburg with other cities like Portland, Astoria, etc. Columns include city name, temperature in July, and temperature in January.

TEMPERATURE.—The range of temperature covering the extremes of 101° in July 85 and 3° in February 84 shows an equable climate when compared with other places where it is not an unrequited excess to have 100° in summer and 30° below zero in winter...

Soils.—The soils are various. The river bottom, being a sandy loam is now more productive than the famous valley of the Nile. Higher up, there is a dark mold with less sand and on the hill a friable clay of yellow color, both of which produce fine crops.

CROPS.—"Once in a decade a dry season may reduce the yield, but even then it is equal to the average of the eastern states. Wheat, oats and barley, in fact every cereal, except corn, are highly productive. Corn can only be raised at a profit on the bottom lands, wheat yields from 15 to 40 bushels per acre barley 15 to 45, oats from 35 to 60, according to their cultivation; 115 bushels of corn have been raised to the acre in a favorable locality. Apples, peaches, plums and every variety of fruits and berries, except peaches and grapes are not equal to any part of the United States, the hills are well adapted for the culture. Vegetables have almost an incredible yield. It is a fine stock country; horses, cattle, hogs and sheep thrive well. Large numbers are raised, especially sheep, the annual wool crop of their county being 750,000 pounds. The population of the county in 1885 was 12,000.

MINERALS.—The county is rich in iron and coal, both of which are easy of access and of an inexhaustible quantity.

Good Society.—Good society is found among people of culture, stability and moral sentiment. Much depends upon correctness of family institutions and the form of government and its administration. We find that in some foreign countries, such as Italy, Russia and some others that ignorance and crime are the characteristics of a large portion of the people. The more people are thrown upon their own resources with proper facilities they make them improve and the better citizens they make, when each one realizes that responsibility rests upon him he realizes and exercises mutual dependence.

Advertising.—The man who places a ten-dollar advertisement in his local paper and flatters himself that he has a great advertiser, will be surprised to learn that a yearly advertiser, in one column in length, in the Chicago Tribune costs the advertiser $25,000.—Ex.

A column ad. in the Tribune at $25,000 is the same as the same ad. in a weekly paper with 1000 circulation at about $325. An Oregon paper though with nearly double circulation exclusively, but we find that it costs where we find a preponderance of stability, prudence and moral sentiment with the idea that true liberty involves great responsibility.
