SENTIMENT VS LAW.

A discussion is going on about whether there ought to be any distinc-tion on account of sex in the matter yet there are many who regard them of hanging. A woman was found as true and who annually spend time gnilty in New York of an atrocious and money following up these mythes murder and condemned to death. On A widow, a cripple, an old man in his dotage; and the like, do not want to pay their tax, and the above sentimentalism carried to its logical conclusion would say they ought not. You say that this feeling is wide spread, so it is, but it is wrong and subversive of the principles of our government. "It is a question of feeling" so you say, what a rule of action we would have, to follow this theory. Suppose the "woman in New York" had killed a woman, the mother of six or eight helpless children, where would your sentimentalism then be? The Oregonian not long since spoke truly and logically upon this subject. A false, sickly sentimentality, has over-ridden justice many a time. Men love women in the true sense best, who want them protected by law as they are. This is true chivalry and not sentiment.
