Do I want the EARTH?

Oh, no! my Brother Ike, in Cincinnati

J. Jaskulek Wants Cash

and will give in exchange for a limited amount of the same, the biggest bargains you ever heard of in watches, clocks, jewelry, hardware, tinware, etc., etc.

Farmers nearly done sowing. Fine weather but a little frost. Large crops of corn to be planted in part of the valley this spring.

The farmers all look cheerful and happy for there never was a better prospect for good crops of all kinds than now.

Our band is improving finely, the professor puts them through for all that they can stand and he knows how to do it.

We need a shoemaker for our sets on short notice. There is a shop and tools all ready for one here (must be a proli).

Mr. John Hall, Mr. Gridley and many others have put out fine young orchards of prunes from one to eight hundred trees each.

The last scene of Matt Ruckles he was going towards the old bark shanty trying to pawn his jack knife for flour to make sympathy of some canines after passing through the reducer.

We understand that the pretty little nose of the Old Maid of the Plainer was put up with special reference to the use of the celebrated Parka that we hear so much about.

IN MEMORIAM.

OF J. B. Brown who died at Oakland Jan. 13th, 1887, aged 76 years 3 mo. 13 days.

Father has gone with the angels. That dear wife will never hear more. Oh weep not so, dear stricken children.

Yes father you are now with the angels. They came at the close of the night, And whispered their beautiful words, And carried you out of my sight.

When we cross the deep dark river, Why should we ever weep? In the arms of our dear savior They tired eyes were closed in sleep.

AGAIN a happy household is called to mourn the loss of a dear one. As the deep shades of night grew deeper, and all sought downy couches, one home was gathered around the bed side, where Lydia had fallen asleep, to sleep the sleep that knows no waking.

When you come to pass through the valley of shadows, the sweet voices of your children will be the first to welcome you home. The sympathy of the entire community go out to the heart broken mourners.
