BEGINNING A LIBRARY.

A Few Reliable Suggestions on the Proper Selection of Books. There comes a time in the life of most young readers when they are anxious to own a library. The desire is often frustrated, sometimes by poverty, but as frequently by a wrong idea as to what makes a library. Middle-aged readers gaze somewhat sadly, now and then, upon a collection of books which, years ago, they labeled "My Library." It has not grown; it has been but little used; and the owner is seldom drawn to it. It is simply a number of bound volumes placed upon shelves. When the reader began to think that the collection of books made a library, he added volume after volume, felt a pride in seeing the collection increase, and one day woke up to the fact that he had no mental use for a lot of books gathered without a purpose and arranged upon no plan. If a young person would own a library he should begin by gathering books which he can, with care and must use. His pocket money may amount to only a few dollars; but he will act judiciously if he spends every penny of it for one book, which he will use frequently rather than for a dozen books, the only parts of which he really admires are the backs and covers. Nine boys out of ten will act wisely if they make an unbridged dictionary the "corner-stone" of their libraries. To purchase it may devour the savings of a year, but the dictionary will prove a good investment, even at that cost. Let the next purchase be a good atlas, one that represents the earth, and not merely that portion of it known as the United States of America. There are some things happening every day outside of this country, which is not the only stage on which tragedies, melodramas and farces are enacted. The dictionary and atlas should be supplemented by a biographical dictionary, by a dictionary of dates, and by Brewer's "Dictionary of Phrase and Fable." With these five books a boy or girl prepared to read intelligently the newspaper and monthly magazine. Surely, the library is not small, and it is daily used it will increase. The intelligent reader of a newspaper or magazine inclines to the habit, which every young reader should form, of consulting the library of five volumes to learn the meaning of words and allusions in the newspaper, places, the time of historical events, the peculiarities of persons mentioned in the periodicals. Then let no one of these pass without challenging it to stand, while you learn all about it. Reading in this way, you will soon find it necessary to increase the small library by adding to it an encyclopaedia. Some of these may seem too costly for the ordinary purse, but the least costly will be an acquisition of the right sort. The library, thus increased by a healthy growth, may be enlarged by adding, from time to time, any book which responds to the reader's mind, or gratifies his desire for knowledge or for mental exhilaration. There are times when every reader desires to be taken out of himself and away from his surroundings. The book which enables him to fly away and be at rest, and then returns him without injury to his every-day life, is a serviceable book. "My Library," says an intelligent writer, "should grow with my mind, my taste and my desire for knowledge. It thus becomes my serviceable friend, to whom I may turn for instruction, refreshment and exhilaration. I know it; and it seems so real a companion that I muse if it is not the substance of what is, and I only the shadow of what may be."—Youth's Companion.

Genuine Boston Frugality. A laughable story is told at the expense of a Boston gentleman, who came with a party of excursionists to the coast. When the Bostonian had been duly dusted, and all traces of travel carefully removed from his immaculate broadcloth and shining beaver, he turned to the affable porter with a benign smile, and vouchsafed: "Well, I suppose you want something for your trouble," and, drawing out of his portly wallet, he took therefrom two bright new pennies, and with the air of a man who was doing rather more than was expected of him, or the occasion demanded, presented them to the porter. A look of puzzled astonishment overspread the features of the African, as nothing smaller than the five-cent nickel circulates here; but as soon as he regained speech he passed them back with the remark: "We have no use for them here, sah!" "O," replied the frugal New Englander, "keep them, keep them; you may go East some time."—San Francisco Cor. Jamestown Journal.

A Little Tot's Cruel Remark. Children are very sympathetic. There's one quite young who's got an aunt whom she loves very dearly, but the child does not understand every thing. The aunt is single, but she does not hope to be so long, although judging by the child's remarks the position of wife is likely to be a very trying one. The gentleman who is the object of fluttering interest has been in the habit of making long and frequent calls. These calls the child has studied with some regard to the aunt she adores. The last one the child assisted at ended abruptly. "Aunt," she said, sadly, "which would you rather do, talk to Mr. Jones or go to a funeral?" Mr. Jones felt like making a subject for a funeral right then.—San Francisco Chronicle.

There is a man in Wellington so short that when he is ill he doesn't know whether he has the headache or corns.—Winfield Chronicle.

It was a very sincere prayer which a little fellow made recently when he said, "O Lord, make me a good boy. And if at first you don't succeed, try, try again." There is also a good deal of wisdom in the prayer.

Said a railroad conductor to his wife, a pious woman: "We need Sunday so badly. No one can tell how homesick and desolate I feel while passing along and hearing the church-bells ringing Sabbath."

SOME ONE says, "The mischievous boy is simply a locomotive off the track." And, we may remark, a wrecked locomotive is generally caused by a misplaced switch.—Puck.

The emotions that crystallize into character must always be the precipitates of intellectual convictions.—E. G. Robinson, D. D.

WHITE FURNITURE.

How a Bright Woman Created a Unique and Beautiful Apartment.

No sooner had we furnished our houses in somber colors with dark mahogany and early English furniture of black oak, which appeared worn-eaten, if it really was not, when, lo! the dealers inaugurated a new era in white furniture, light-colored upholstered goods, and from the dignified and aristocratic English or colonial styles we became imbued with the period of Louis Quinze. However, the dark rich furniture is too beautiful to give up without a struggle, and fashion now dictates that those who can afford it shall have each room in their residence furnished to represent not only a distinct period, but a certain country as well. Thus we have English rooms, French rooms, colonial, Egyptian and Japanese apartments, according to the purse or fancy. The first "white" built in New York of any prominence is the music room in the Villard mansion, now owned and occupied by Mr. Whitelaw Reid. The floor is highly polished in light colored woods, and the entire apartment is of ivory white, picked out with gold, and in the panels of the walls medallions of lutes, ribbons and scrolls of music. A handsome "white room" has the floor of polished wood, with here and there a white Astrakhan rug; the furniture is of white, picked out with gold, upholstery in white satin brocade; the curtains and other draperies are of white plush embroidered with gold; the picture frames are white and gold, a white easel stands in one corner and a white and gold piano. It makes a most beautiful apartment. Not long ago the writer described a room to a clever young wife who lives in an adjacent town. She has comparatively little money, but excellent taste; recently she invited me to see her "white room," which she surprised me by stating was all the result of her own ingenuity and cost but little. The wood floor had been stained with white paint, to look like cherry, and several white fox rugs, which cost about $3.50, were laid on there. She had bought several of the tripod-legged tables with white lines, using the liquid gilding, and covered with white plush, a rich cream white felt, with yellow satin bows at the corners and gold fringe. She also made a mantel scarf of white plush, trimmed with yellow bows. An old-fashioned high-backed kitchen chair she painted white and made for it a yellow plush cushion. One of the oval dining chairs, which she also painted white and gold, and over the red and black braided seat she had tacked white felt, with some yellow flowers embroidered upon it, while the back was decorated with a yellow Chinese pattern. Plants grew in common flower pots, painted white, and in an easel was a picture of a white child, while over the mantel was an old-fashioned oval mirror, such as were used fifteen years ago. Between the windows she had hung the mirror lengthwise and painted its common black wooden frame white, keeping a white silk scarf, with gold figures, around it. A milking stool, also painted white, with a bunch of yellow flowers painted upon the seat, stood in a corner; at the windows were white China silk curtains, tied back with yellow bows. The piano, being of the same material as silk handkerchiefs, of course wash as well. Old painted picture frames were also discolored and gilded to match the other articles. And a beautiful wall bracket was made of a square of pine board, to which was nailed three little shelves put on irregularly like three steps. This also was painted white, gilded on the edges of the shelves and hung up by screw eyes, which were concealed by yellow bows—a pretty yellow. A Leeds vase was one of the ornaments, a white candlestick which held a yellow twisted candle, a choice bit of Royal Worcester, which were among the possessions, and, of course, other ornaments about the apartment. A bird sang in a brass cage, harmonizing with the decorations. "What was the matter with you?" she asked, "it is of this fact that the pretty owner of all informed us that this charming result was reached at a cost not exceeding twenty-five dollars. With his good-natured and white piano, which apartment cost in the neighborhood of $10,000, or that of the pretty young housewife who, with little money but much taste and industry, had created an apartment unique, beautiful and, better than all, showing her own individuality."—N. Y. Mail and Express.

Diameter of a Circle. Relatively few persons are aware that the diameter of a circle or pipe is an area equal to that of any two other ones may be found by means of nothing but the square corner of a board and a rule, without the aid of any calculation. The process consists simply in laying off the two diameters on two edges of the board and measuring diagonally from one to the other. If a carpenter's square is handy the process is reduced to the simple diagonal measurement. In case there are three or more pipes to be led into one, any two of them may be converted into an equivalent one, and this one may be added to the other.—Boston Budget.

A Creaking Hinge

Is dry and turns hard, until oil is applied, after which it moves easily. When the joints, or hinges, of the body are stiffened and inflamed by Rheumatism, they cannot be moved without causing the most excruciating pains. Ayer's Sarsaparilla, by its action on the blood, relieves this condition, and restores the joints to good working order.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla has effected, in our city, many most remarkable cures, in cases which baffled the efforts of the most experienced physicians. Were it necessary, I could give the names of many individuals who have been cured by taking this medicine. In my case it has worked wonders, relieving me of Rheumatism, after being troubled with it for years. In this, and all other diseases arising from impure blood, there is no remedy with which I am acquainted, that affords such relief as Ayer's Sarsaparilla.—B. H. Lawrence, M. D., Baltimore, Md.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured me of Gout and Rheumatism, when nothing else would. It has eradicated every trace of disease from my system.—H. H. Short, Manager Hotel Belmont, Lowell, Mass.

I was, during many months, a sufferer from chronic Rheumatism. The disease afflicted me grievously, in spite of all the remedies I could find, until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I took several bottles of this preparation, and was speedily restored to health.—J. Freeman, Independence, Va.
