RAILROAD MILLIONAIRES.
Their Lives not Devoid of Dark Days, Filled with Anxiety.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—The Commercial Bulletin to day, commenting editorially on Charles Crocker's testimony given yesterday before the U. S. railroad commission, during which he said there was a time when he would have been glad to quit with a clean shirt, says: "Railroad millionaires are constant targets of self-sacrificing philosophists who propose to abolish poverty by abolishing wealth; but it never occurs to them that wrecked millionaires often have a hard road to travel and have been at 'Poverty Corner' themselves, even while prosecuting the most gigantic enterprises, from which the whole country has been immensely benefitted."

Crocker's testimony is quoted, and the editorial says: "After all, those millionaires do not always recline on beds of roses; trouble and anxiety incident to their enterprises, even when they are successful, are something which anti-poverty philosophers probably never experienced, but when as in this case, the whole thing was on the verge of a collapse we doubt whether they would be ready to exchange their condition for that which was only attainable by the rich man, after such a rough experience, even with a clean shirt thrown in.

SUCH serious conflicts of opinion have arisen between the members of the Civil Service Commissioner over the question of the right of removal of clerks, that there is some talk of the resignation of the President, Mr. Edgerton, who holds that the appointing power has authority to dismiss employes in the classified service absolutely, without asking questions, while his colleagues maintain that no removals should be made without specifying the cause that this power is extremely limited. It is expected that the President will be finally called upon to settle the controversy.

If all who use distilled liquors would take the same quantity of malt liquors without inducing non-drinkers to begin, some benefit might be experienced by the community. But the effort appears to be to induce everybody to drink beer that some may not drink stronger liquors. As there is so much beer sold, we may ask where are the cases of reformation? With a considerable acquaintance with reformed persons we have as yet to find one who was brought back from gin, whisky or brandy by the substitution of beer.—Christian Advocate.

If you should ever go to sea, there are several little things you want to remember. In the first place, if you hear the captain talking about a crack yacht don't ask him if a crack yacht is a yacht that leaks. Remember that the swell of the sea is not caused by dropsy, and that ships are never boarded at hotels. Make friends with the steward or stewardess, for there is no telling how soon you may need his or her services, and you must not get angry if, after rolling all night, the steward asks you if you don't want a fresh roll.

Dan Emmett, the father of modern negro ministrelsy, is selling milk for a living in Chicago. He is a genial old man of 72, who entertains his friends with interesting reminiscences. Occasionally he blacks up and gives them a taste of what negro ministrelsy was before it degenerated into burlesque opera and male ballet business. Emmitt's fame will rest on the authorship of "Dixie," which he wrote to please some professional friends in New York never dreaming that it would become an imperishable national air.

"Stop work the moment you feel that it is telling upon you, and take your vacation on your feet—not on your back." Such is the sound sense expressed by the critic "lounger" in a bit of a paragraph telling of the discomfiture of some brain-workers who overdid the thing.

The egg of unbelief is hatched in the nest of human passions. As Massillon observed: "The yoke of faith is never rejected but in order to shake off the yoke of duties; and religion would never have an enemy were it not the enemy of self-indulgence and vice."
