NO. 22 On the Ere of the Campaign The political situation is unique The candidates and platforms are before the country, and there is more or less skirmishing along the lines. The party chiefs are maneuvering for advantage at Washington, with the Mills bill marking the Democratic position. while Republican Senators are seeking to formulate some cunning tariff device that will reconcile the platform with the necessary reduction of the revenue without incurring the odium of "free-trade" cry they have endea to apply to the Mills bill. But th only a drowsy hum to be heard in ical circles, and the candidates t selves set no example of activity. President is at his desk as usual at ing to his exacting duties, cast vagrant thought behind him toth breezes he lately enjoyed.
