THE SEATTLE FIRE. A Large Portion of city Destroyed. THE LOSS IN $1,000,000 TO $1,500,000.

Ninety-Six Acres Destroyed—Only Three Brick Buildings Left in the City. SEATTLE, W. T. June 6.—A fire broke out at 2:30 this afternoon in the Denny block, corner of Madison and Front streets.

The wind blowing strongly from the north caused the fire to spread rapidly and get beyond control. Within an hour the Opera and Coleman blocks were in flames, and the fire continued to spread with unaltered fury.

The entire city is threatened with destruction. The firemen are helpless, and they have telegraphed in all directions for aid.

SEATTLE, W. T. June 7.—The fire which started yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock by a careless workman overturning a glue pot in a little cabinet shop resulted in a conflagration which destroyed nine-tenths of the business portion of this city.

The area devastated comprises ninety-four acres, thickly built. There are about five hundred and fifty brick buildings.

The wooden buildings were mostly old, and, being in the fire limits, they alone had burned no regret would have been felt, but every brick building in town is gone except three. One of the latter is the Boston block containing the postoffice, and another is an unfinished building, but the two sets of survivors were much injured.

When the sun set last night all the railroad property in the city was destroyed, every bank, theatre, engine house, telegraph office, news paper office, was gone.

Education of every child possesses two values, the information gained and the discipline obtained. Besides its use as a guide in our conduct the acquisition of each order of facts has also its worth as a mental drill.

Education cannot be acquired without pains and application. It is not a process of waiting and digging for pure water, but when once you come to the clear, cool springs, they seem to rise to meet you.

Every grain helps fill the bushel, so does the improvement of every moment increase knowledge and usefulness. A classical education is a great accomplishment, but it does not always make a man.

One who has been raised from childhood in his majority within the limited circumference of a school mustered all the college courses, is destitute of that knowledge of men and things indispensably necessary to prepare him for private or public life.

Higher education is one of the demands of the age, but rudiments should be learned first. A diploma is valueless unless the bearer of it has the proper evidence within himself.

One education should be such that he is his own diploma. It is no advantage to a man to know much unless he knows according to what he knows.

The chief properties of wisdom are to be mindful of things past, careful for things present, and provident for things to come. "He that thinks himself the happiest man is really so; but he that thinks himself the wisest man is generally the greatest fool."

A wise man is provided for occurrences of any kind, the good he manages, the bad he vanishes; in prosperity he betrays no presumption, and in adversity he feels no despondency.

By gaining a good education you shall have your reward in the rich stores of knowledge you have thus collected, and which shall be available to you in all your life.

While fleets and armies are being equipped, and cities are being built, the intellectual investments you have made will be permanent and enduring, infusing as the constant force of the Niagara.

Not will you be able to fill these waterworks. Pour into the glass a stream of water and it will fill to the brim until it will hold another drop.

But you can pour your mind throughout a whole lifetime streams of knowledge from every conceivable quarter, and it will never be full, but it will constantly thirst for more and welcome each fresh supply with a greater joy.

At around you may impart to these children the chief properties of wisdom are to be mindful of things past, careful for things present, and provident for things to come.

THE BEACH. By Maud Bacon. The investigation of the wonders of nature is a never failing source of pleasure, and much knowledge is gained thereby.

Among the greatest wonders of the earth is that vast body of water called the ocean. Its area is about three-fourths the surface of the entire globe, and it is continually in motion.

Much information concerning the inhabitants of the "almighty deep" may be gained by sailing over its surface; but I think it much more pleasant to study its many curiosities by strolling on the beach.

The habits of both its wings and salt-marine dwellers have been the life study of many wise men. Almost any section of the beach although only a few hundred feet in length, will furnish abundant material for years of study.

To watch the waves that ever come rolling in is a pleasure of which no seaman tires. The great number of varieties of birds that are always found along the shores make the beach a delightful field for the naturalist.

Some islands which are uninhabited by man have been found to be picked up by birds, and their entire surface by the nests of lands of the sea.

These birds submit to a great extent upon animal food picked up along the shore. Of course you all know "the shells of the ocean are almost every conceivable shape, size and color; the great varieties of uses to which many of them are put and the beauty of many of them for ornamentation, make some of them very valuable.

A shell that may be picked up on nearly every beach, is one of nature's greatest curiosities. It affords a snug dwelling place for the animal within, and its peculiar construction gives it great strength and lightness.

An empty shell when held to the ear gives a peculiar sound varying in volume according to the amount of noise in the immediate vicinity, but is never silent.

This sounding of shells has been the cause of much thought, and on the account of its beauty and harmony, they have been poetically used to "repeat the murmurs of their ocean home."

A great scientist after a lifetime of full and study, on hearing a remark upon his wonderful attainments said: "I feel like a child playing on the sea-shore pebbles in now, and then, bringing up a prettier pebble or shell than usual, while the great ocean of science is yet unexplored."

THE FORELIFE. By Edward M. Jenkins. To be truly great one must be truly good, since the greatest gain is the greatest good.

The extent of true greatness is properly estimated in accordance with the services performed for the good of mankind. We are convinced of this fact, by studying the lives of some of the world's most famous men.

Napoleon fought for his own honor and the glory of his army, while Washington fought for the good of the American people. A countryman who is a warrior at the world's achievements of the former, but the brilliant meteor they shine brightly for a time, but were as suddenly invisible in obscurity, and in time his very name will be forgotten, or remembered with reproach.

HOW AND WHAT TO READ. (By Abbie Parrott.) Richard Baxter says, "It is not the reading of many books which is necessary to make a man wise or good, but the well reading of a few. There is a right and a wrong way to do anything; the same may be said of reading.

Four rules which if learned and remembered will serve to guide us in the art of reading aright. First, read with attention, your mind should be alert and wide awake. This is not easy to do, and some people are unable to keep their minds concentrated on anything.

It is of the utmost importance that we cultivate the habit of doing everything thoroughly of keeping our minds fixed on the sermon or lecture or conversation addressed to us, and in reading, forgetting every thing but the printed page before us.

"Attention is the mother of memory." We complain about our poor memories, when in reality it is our powers of attention and observance that are at fault. No one who has a good memory can give an accurate account of that which he has seen or heard or read.

Secondly, read with concentration. The importance of cultivating the habit of attention cannot be too strongly emphasized, for very little can be accomplished without it.

Thirdly, read with comprehension. One may concentrate the mind and yet fail to catch the author's meaning. What is the remedy? Frequent repetition will clear away the mists and make the words plain.

Fourthly, read with discrimination. One should not read everything that comes under his hand, but should exercise the greatest caution in selecting a friend since our associations tend so greatly to influence our characters and prospects.

There is more to be learned in this section of the market than in all other sections put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years Doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and constantly failed to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable.

Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, requiring constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market.

Oh, What a Cough. Some people, "not to the manner born," become envious when other people attend to their own business and have a reasonable amount of success.

Then, they would say "manner of evil against you," never stoop to their tactics of vituperation, but go forward, and you will pity the poor fellow ere long. Remember it is always a compliment to have some people speak ugly things about you. Just the reverse of what they say is generally true.

An old lady at Burke, Tex., who had been troubled with chronic diarrhoea for over fifteen years, says that Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has done more good than all the other medicines she had ever used. Mr. S. J. Treatwell, the leading merchant of the town, vouches for the above statement. For sale by A. C. Marsters & Co.

FRIENDSHIP. By Cole Stanton. Friendship is an attachment between persons of genial habits, dispositions and pursuits. Man is naturally a social being, and has an instinctive aversion to solitude and loneliness.

Though he possess every other virtue, he still finds his happiness incomplete. He seeks for some person whom he considers his friend and to whom in difficulty or distress he may look for advice and consolation.

True friendship like all other attachments of great value, is rare, and also limited in its objects; therefore we cannot hope to have many friends who value our lives and our interests as they do their own.

This precious boon affording sympathy and offering aid, contributes largely to the happiness of the world. It purifies the disposition and elevates the character of those who cherish it.

We can scarcely open a volume, ancient or modern, without being reminded what an excellent thing it is. The examples of David and Jonathan, of Damon and Pythias, and Achilles and Patroclus stand out as if they were sometimes carried. But in modern times friendship is seldom remarkable for such levety.

What would be more intolerable than the consciousness that in all the world not one heart beats in unison with our own? On the other hand think of the happiness there is in possessing a true friend, a friend who will bear a part of our misfortunes and cordially rejoice with us when the hour of happiness comes.

One should not read everything that comes under his hand, but should exercise the greatest caution in selecting a friend since our associations tend so greatly to influence our characters and prospects.

There is more to be learned in this section of the market than in all other sections put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. Disarming an Unseen foe. "This was won, was a paradox," as Hamlet says. Since, however, the people of America and other lands have been enabled to put Hostetter's Stomach Bitters against unseen foe, malaria, light fever, a paradox, but an easy possibility. Where malaria evolves its misty venom to poison the air, and decaying unwholesome vegetation impregnates the water, there, in the very stronghold of miasma, is the auxiliary potent to disarm the foe and assure efficient protection.

NOT A FIT, but an expression of delight. "About a week ago, says a Los Angeles, Calif., druggist, 'a Chinaman came in with a lame shoulder. I sold him a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and guaranteed that it would cure him. He came in again tonight, and as soon as he got inside the door, began to swing his arms over his head like an Indian child swinging. I thought the blamed fool had a fit, but he finally stopped long enough to say, 'Medicine very fine; also same make me feel plenty good.' Chamberlain's Pain Balm, is without an equal for sprains, rheumatism, neuralgia, tooth ache, etc. For sale by A. C. Marsters & Co.
