JURIES AND JUSTICE.

The Cronin murder trial dragged on for several days without a single juror being empannelled, and under the system pursued it will make every reading man ineligible. The

In commenting on the subject, Chicago Inter-Ocean of the 10th says: It seems to be the opinion of the attorneys for the defense that no man is fitted for jury service who has heard or read of the case now at issue, or who has formed or expressed an opinion, not upon the case itself but upon the rumors which are abroad concerning it. Now, most men are able to divest themselves of opinions, which really are rather conjectures than opinions, formed by rumors, and to receive evidence as though it were the first news of the matter presented to them. This is so generally true that the statutes of Illinois, which certain ly lean to extreme jealousy of the powers of courts and prosecutors and to extreme care for the actual or potential rights of persons accused of crime, do of themselves declare that mere knowledge gained from newspapers and current rumor shall not act in bar of a man's qualification as juror. The defense, despite the enactment of the law and the decision of the court now in session, persists in acting as though this were a disqualiof executing them." fication. It seems the whole jury system will have to be remodelled or entirely abolished before substantial justice can be obtained where the criminal has money or means to employ wary counsel to heldge his diabolical acts with a wall of legal technicalities. As the Inter-Ocean says, any man is able to divest himself of preconceived notions or opinions when facts are brought forward in evidence. The least compe petent jurors, as far as the redress of public wrongs is concerned, are those who never read the daily or weekly prints, or who never take the trouble to inform themselves on occurring events. But these are the best friends of vicious criminals, for they are easily duped by the trickery of lawyers, and in many instances permit men by their verdicts to go at large who should be serving the state as punishment for the'r crimes. We believe in giving to every person, of whatever crime he may be accused, a fair and impartial trial, but do not believe the best interests of the these technicalities which "hedge around" a criminal, and in very many instances throws down every barrier against the depraved preying upon society.

Certain implied powers must necessarily result to the courts of justice from the nature of their institution, but the supreme court has held, in the case of Hudson vs. Goodwin, that jurisdiction of crimes against the state is not one of them.

Chancellor Kent says that the principle assumed in that case is considered to be safe and sound. He said that "the mere circumstance that the party injured by the offense under prosecution was an officer of the government of the United States does not give jurisdiction; for neither the constitution, nor the judicial acts ounded upon it, gave the federal courts a general jurisdiction in criminal cases affecting the officers of government, as they have in cases affecting public ministers and consuls. It is well that Chicago and New York are widely separated, else in their bitterness toward each other over the question, of where the world's fair will be held serious trouble would ensue. As it is the fight is restrained to the newspapers and vicious stabs and blows are given with pen and pencil. As instance this from the Chicago Tribune: "Cæsar had his Brutus.
