Glory! Old boy, it's hard to quit it,
Even to leave it for over night.
Clinch it, porphry, where we hit it,
With hard, black fingers, stingy and tigh

That little seam that means salvation-Hope for me and a home for Sue-Four lonely years of half starvation But their heads into that streak of blue.

Ugh! how the cold snow-flour is sifting! Curse on the wind, that it comes just now Only my tracks for trail, and drifting; And fourteen inches is tough to plow. Hard work! That's what it is, old Rover, That mile was swelled to four times its size Trail plum gone, an I the daylight over, And wind that cuts like steel in the eyes Whinning, Rover? But that won't mend it, Come, we must take it like men, you know One stop here in the cold would end it;

Our only safety is on the go. Think who's praying in old Pequawket, Struck it rich in the Emply Pocket!" See her laughing and crying? Well, some What? You won't move? Then on m shoulder

I'll have to pack you, you rascal you! Nn-h! you're a load! I'm getting colder; There's a ton of lead in either shoe. Down! O, God! But we've got to make it
Ah-h! How this pinion keeps off the storm
Drowsy—drowsy—I cannot shake it—

And this is so soft and so warm! What should life and its cares be won for? Sleep, the Forgetter, is kindiest. Come, old dog, we are done for! Here—we—will—rest.

> Leading A Dual Life. San Francisco Chronicle.

One of the queer things in the study of crime is that when an apparently new kind of offense against law and morals is discovered, almost all at once the crime makes its appearance all around us, as 1 it were a new form of epidemic disease. There has been a good deal of speculation about this unquestioned fact, some students of social problem claiming that imitation accounts for it, others that the discovery leads to more extended research and thus discloses what has existed but has been kept hidden. Whichever theory may be correct, the fact is certainly as stated, and will probably continue to be so as long as law breaking exists. Within the past few years there have at least a dozen cases been brought to light of men leading dual lives-that is, men who had actually two homes, two wives, two sets of children, two classes of acquaint ances, and some times two distant occupations, it being understood, of course, that each establishment was in perfect and complete ignorance of the other Usually death has been the key waich has reyealed the mystery, and has brought forward two sets of weeping relatives marriage to lay the last memento on the bier of the dual husband, and then fight over the disposition of the propery; but a recent celebrated case in New York is ar exception, for the man's villiany has been exposed while he was alive.

The reference is to Sheriff Flack, the man who obtained the fraudulent divorce from his wife and who has been indicted by the grand jury for his conduct in the affair. It turns out that he has been leading a dual life for seventeeu years, and that without any one's knowledge At his home in East Fifty seventh street he was James A. Flack, while only twenty blocks away he was Mr. Raymond. in each home, if such be the proper word to use, he had a wife and son, they having been called Flack at one place and Raymond at the other.

Perhaps the most singular part of thi louble existenbe is the fact that Flack, as Flack, ran for office in 1885 and again in 1888, being elected county clerk the first time and sheriff the second, and no one found him out. It has been said very often that the "fierce light which beats upon a throne' is but a tailow dip to a calcium light when compared with the searching rays of in restigation which are cast upon and around a candidate for office, and yet no one of Flack's political opponents ever got hold of the story, and it probably would never have been known in the story and it probably would never have been known in the story and it probably would never have been known in the story and the story and the story and the story are stored in the story and the story are stored in the story and the story and the story and the story are stored in the it probably would never have been known id it not been for his attempt to obtain a divorce from his lawful wife, to which he was urged by "Mrs. Raymond," who knew her position and repented of the sin which she was committing; but in order to clear her own skirts and to secure the position of the son of the unlawful union, she induced Flack to commit another crime and to attempt to get rid of his lawful wife by a fraud. No romance writer with any regard for the probabilities would have ventured to devise such a situation. The unlawful wite, desiring to make her illegitimate son a religious teacher, induces her para mour to attempt a fraud upon his legitimate wife in order that the child of the unhallowed union may be legitimized before his entry into the ministry. Some of the modern French novelists or dramatists might venture to create such a complication, but there are no English or American writers of fiction, with perhaps one or two exceptions, who would ven-

Such things throw strange side lights upon human nature. They show that reputation and character are two very different things, and that a man who is to all appearances a reputable member of society may be only a gross hypocrite, and that those who are seemingly his most intimate friends, may only know one side of the man's life and character.

Poor-Rich Men. Did you ever see a wealthy, rich manthat is, a man full of weal and, at the same time, possessed of much money? am sure, but some. I confess it is an old story, but there are some new lights on it; and what I desire to do is to show you how the pover y of rich people is growing more and more grievous, and the wealth of poor people is growing greater and more nutritious. Indeed, I am willing to exactly controvert Mr. George and assert, the rich are growing poorer and the poor are growing icher, that there are no millionaires except day laborers and hard-up artisians, Riches are not what they used to be and property is not what it once was. Do you imagine that Jay Gould would dare to sit down with his friends to an oldfashioned Roman feast uch as Lucullus or Heloogabalus spread? The mob would be on him in half an hour, if the police did not get the start. He would be in the city prison; and there would only be a question between his sanity and his criminality. People can not use money or property now-a-days, except under very rigid restraints. Suppose Mr. Vander-bilt gave an order to have his proportionate at are of the New York Central destroyed, or, suppose he should buy up the whole stock of the Hudson River track from New York to Albany and set on gangs of men to obliferate it, would be be obeyed? To be sure he might own, and may control the road, but he can not close it. So long as the New York Central is specially valuable to the people of the United States they will not allow it to be broken up. I should like to see the attempt made in order to see it demonstrated that the popular will and needs of the public are above all technical private rights. The mob-outbreaks of rather frequent occurrence go to show that, after all, law and custom reside in the living crowd rather than in precedents and courts. A mob of the nineteenth century in our centers of tumults of the coarser and barbarous ages But this does not state the question at al in its fullness. I understand as, technically, Vanderbilt owns all the coaches of the New York Central Railway; but he dare not prevent me from riding in any one of them that is provided fo passengers owing to any dislike or comity I will enter his coach in spite of him, and enjoy its full privileges. The tendency is toward the democratic use of all wealth. Vanderbilt's name might be stands for the state. The state regulates the use of the property: Mr. Vanderbilt does not. By he chicanery can be exclude a Jew or a negro from his cars without public permission. As to rates of passage he dare not tax me one penny beyond what the state permits. No matter what his extra expenses are or the decrease of revenue, I shall ride for two cents a mile and snap my fingers at the objurgations of the nominal owner Every assion of the legislatures of our states is hable to increase restrictions or the use of wealth. It is rare that such acts are not formulated.

The only medicines sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from their manufacturors, that they will do just what is claimed for them—that is, benefit or cure in all cases of diseases for which they are recommended, or the money paid for them will be promptly refunded—are Dr. Pierce's world-inmed specifies, manufactured by World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N.
