Every citizen of Salem, without a single exception, rich or poor, says the bridge must be rebuilt. Such unanimity augurs well for the future of Salem. She will gather strength from her losses, rebuild better and grander than before, and the spirit of enterprise thereby infused will push the city and country forward at a rate that will discount any past period of development.

Notwithstanding the fires and floods the prosperity of the people of the Pacific coast during the last decade has been unprece-
