PUBLIC AND PAROCHIAL SHOOLS This is a subject which is always pertinent in the discussion of American institutions, and in the following comments on Bishop Spaulding's sermon on the occasion of a dedication of a Catholic church at Peoria, Ill., the Inter-Ocean gives publicity to its views on this question: Bishop Spaulding's advice to Cath olics, and it must be remembered that he was speaking to Catholics only, was that they should not send their children to the public schools, and the reason assigned by him for the advice was that the education imparted at the public schools is "Godless." And he also said that such religious instruc tion as can be imparted at the homes of children, or in the churches which they frequent, is sufficient to their spiritual nurture. Most Protestants will disagree with his first and third propositions. It is the belief of most Protestants in America that religious education can be accomplished at home and by means of the ordinary machinery of the churches. It is quite certain that millions of practical their proper names, and to us a Dem-Christians have been brought out of the public schools.

It may be taken for granted that most Protestants would prefer that pendent papers in both parties, but religious instructions should form part of each day's school routine. But they prefer that the schools should be "Godless," in the very neutral sense of abstinence from religious instruction, rather than that they should be sectarian, and in the present condition of work.
