A Remarkable Dream.

If I remember correctly in the month

February or March, 1860, there were living in The Dalles two Chinamen, one of whom by the name of Lee Wung had a washhouse near the northwest corner of Court and Main streets. About that time ther came from below two Chinamen en route to Walla Walla, arriving on the steamer Idaho-the only conveyance. The upper river being blocked with ice they hired two men who had charge of a pack train to take them and their goods to their destination.

About a week after they started Lee Wung called on Col. N. H. Gates and told him the Chinamen had been murdered by the two packers, and he saw the act done while asleep. He said D. shot one Chinaman and killed him and the other ran. He was followed by the other packer and murdered. Col. Gates thought the Chinaman demented, as he had not been out of town since the ornamental ever since, a more modern satiscle keeping the time for the house. The quake stopped the new clock and started the old one, which, refreshed by its long rest, is ticking away as merrily as possible, and bids fair to run for another century, if the next earthquake does not cause it to change its mind.

The matter of wool is one of great importance in this state. The Oregonian condences considerable information in the following paragraph: "The wool trade of the world is so closely inter-related that our markets will watch closely the sale of 350,000 bales of Australian wool that will be held this week in London. Sour markes will watch closely the sour assessment of the source of the een absent from the city since the Chinamen had started for Walla Walla; but his dream was clear in details that he had not the least didiculty in pointing out the place where the murder was committed. What Lee told Col. Gates and others that he saw while asleep proved to be facts.

After the sheriff and posse had buried the Chinamen, they returned to The Dalles, and Mr. White arrested one of the packers near Jacksonville and the other one in that city. They were brought back, examined before a magistrate, and held to answer the crime. After being in the old city jail for some time they managed to escape by cutting off the lock of the door, and were never recaptured.

Nothing more was heard of them until 1868, when Mr. Trevitt, happening to be in Scattle, was walking in the suburbs, and noticed a man sitting on a wagon tongue apparently in the last stage of consumption, who called him by name. Trevitt did not recognize the man until he told him his name and that he was one of the two packers who murdered the Chinamen at Spanish Hollow. He further stated that Lee Wung related the facts as correctly as if he had witnessed the act, and advised Trevitt never to kill a Chinaman as he had no peace of mind since he committed the deed. He died soon afterwards. The other man escaped to California, where he was shot and left for dead by a posse of men who had followed him and his companions in charge cf a band of stolen horses. He finally recovered; but is now a cripple, dependent upon public charity.

Since writing the above I have read it over to Mr. Chas. White, who was in the city during the week, and he verifies every word in relation to this remarkable dream.
