The condition of the Mississipp valley region, recently flooded, is very deplorable, and the unfortunate victims, who have been deprived of homes and the accumulated wealth of years in a few hours, should elicit the sympathy of those more favorably situated. In Oregon, in regard to these natural calamities, we have been highly favored, and from our bountiful stores we should liberally respond for the relief of sufferers. Such sudden misfortunes cannot happen without distress following, and our charitable institutions cannot act too quickly in ascertaining where help is needed.
