

TRADE FIGURES.

An eastern exchange says: It is quite true that the bounteous American harvest of 1891 and the unusual scantiness of that of Europe had much to do with increasing our exports for the fiscal year that ended on the 30th of last month, but it also is true that our exports of things not agricultural were unusually large.

On the other hand, our imports of lead tobacco fell off by more than $3,000,000, and those of cigars and cigarettes by nearly $1,000,000. We grew and made more at home. We imported less lumber from Canada. We kept more than $6,000,000 out of home that we had been in the habit of paying to Europe for improved goods.

During the eleven months ended May 31, 1892, we imported 359,907,331 pounds of tin plates, terra plates and tappers tin, against 888,884,741 pounds in the corresponding eleven months of 1891, which is a sufficient answer to the free-trade falsehood that the increased duty is not checking importation.

The fiscal year just ended has been a remarkably prosperous one for the United States. The country has raised more agricultural products, manufactured more goods, mined more ore and built more ships than for long years before.

Democratic papers are attempting to make political capital out of the disturbances at Homestead, Pa., and say if free-trade had been in operation in the United States these would not have occurred.

The late elections in England do not insure a certain Liberal victory, and if Gladstone forms the ministry he will have hard work to carry forward his favorite measures.

In the Cour d'Alene mines there is war and bloodshed between union and non-union men, and several have been killed and wounded.

The Oregon delegation has been successfully incorporating in the river and harbor bill a very liberal appropriation for the Cascade locks and a change to the contract system.

The seizure of the British vessel found poaching in Behring sea was commendable act on the part of the United States, and the captain of the Corwin is entitled to considerable credit for his prompt action in the matter.

CAPITAL AND WAGES.

The congressional investigation into the strike at Homestead has brought out the fact that the scale of wages was much higher than at first supposed, ranging from $80 to $275.

It was only a few months ago that Andrew Carnegie was on this coast, explaining to the newspapers the benefits of the high protective tariff system.

Will our esteemed contemporary be consistent and state that the riot in the Cour d'Alene mines is a "tariff object lesson?" We think not.

There appears to be a doubt in regard to President Harrison signing the river and harbor bill, as it appropriates a much larger amount than had been received from any previous Congress.
