We have been told of many scenes and incidents growing out of the flood of June 4th, and ambitious reporters have busted clouds and milldams and almost ruised their imaginations in their frantic endeavors to gain notoriety and fame in reportorial journalism, but the incident we are about to relate is true and told without hope of reward. On Sunday following the flood, after the water had subsided and gone to join their kindred in the "Father of Waters," L. B. Preston, of Tryonville, discovered that he was minus two horses, and, of course, search was instituted for the lost. Near the vilage is a wild grape vine that winds affectionately around a tree of good proportions with quite a large spreading top, the vine, as is frequently the case, forming a sort of net work among the branches, and there, not ten feet from the ground, in the protecting embraces of the tree top and vine, was one of the lost horses alive and safe. The animal was rescued from and safe. The animal was rescued from his lofty quarters and is now notorious as a hero and flood relic.
