If to this there be added the news regarding the wholly satisfactory quarantine conference at Washington, just concluded, and the adoption of stringent regulations to be enforced in every port of the United States where a vessel can land, it will be seen that the oceanic cholera route is guarded at each end, and that a comparative measure of immunity is secured.

These precautions, however, should not cause our cities and towns to become lax or neglectful in the matter of | wards for killing deer. The Indians are preventive hygienic rules and regula- said to be killing deer right along, regardtions, says the San Francisco Chronicle. The cholera bacillus may effect a landing, in spite of every precaution that can be taken against it, and we must use every endeavor to sterilize its favorite lurking and breeding places so that number of sheep in Crook county will be it will die of inanition. The authorities agree that the one thing fatal to the spread of cholera is cleanliness, and that, on the other hand, it multiplies and grows and ramifies among dirt and filth as rapidly as the wild gourd under a summer sun.

Hamburg will not be able to stamp out the cholers entirely during the coming season. It may, and probably will, prevent its becoming epidemic, but the germs of the terrible disease do not need to wait for an epidemic before starting on their journey across the Atlantic. If we ing the easiest to prepare, and would be of want to be protected surely against a quality unsurpassed by any county in the cholera, we must not depend solely state and perhaps in the union. ## MATTHEW P. DEADY.

The death of Judge Deady in Portland yesterday morning removes from active life one of the most prominent or help himself in the least when taken in, characters in the northwest, and a man universally respected. He was of a day or two when the old man must tolan enterprising citizen and an eminent jurist, and the state at large suffers an age, but there is no certainty as to that and irreparable loss in his death. No person is better adapted, by reason of an something fapulous. As John used to be a intimate acquaintance for many years, friend of the late James B. Stephens, and a to pay a proper tribute to the moral and intellectual worth of the deceased than the editor of the Oregonian, and tury ago, he was probably well along toward the following excerpts are taken from a century, and possibly considerably over the leading editorial in that paper: that. Poor old John lingered superfluous the leading editorial in that paper:

Great is the fortune of opportunity to the munity at the beginning of its growth and is able to take a leading part in the formastate, its own individual form and character No state is a mere accident. It is a product derived from the character of its greater or nore forceful men and women.

It would hardly be possible to name anin the making of Oregon as Matthew P. Deady. To the observer of our historic growth his hand has been apparent in the gradual rise of the whole tramework of this structure that we call the state. No other man has so impressed himself upon its constitution, its legislation, its jurispudence law and custom in which a state roots its manhood, and though physical infirmities character many things that will never be effaced. His death marks another solemn step in the passing of our pioneers.

The Georgia Democrats have figured out their division of the spoils at 2,400 offices, and they have arranged a grand excursion of office-seekers to Washington to demand their rights. With Hoke Smith in the cabinet the Georgians feel that they have at last Hill that they are again in the house of their fathers, and they propose to igal sons. The fatted calf must be brought to the slaughter.

That "New Hotel." THE DALLES, March 23, 1893.

So, according to the Chronicle, "a real estate firm in The Dalles gives it out as a fact that some Portland capitalists have been said this h the first time he has made looking over The Dalles with a view to this statement, and it covered the matter erecting a handsome four-story brick hotel in full. to be located on the Vogt property, adjoining A. A. Brown's grecery store," and the Chronicle comments on the allegation by saying, that "many have wondered why The Dalles has not had a hotel suitable to struck in the vicinity of Archibald, on the New Orleans Northwestern railway, barely missing the town. All the buildings we have are not good enough for the present age and, located as they are, give passing travelers a poor idea of our city."

Of course, if we had "a handsome four-story brick hotel" on the corner of Second and Federal streets every U. P. passenger train would stop half an hour to allow the passengers to have a look at it; but in that case the real estate firm, which gives out the information, would deprive themselves of the heaseffs to be derived from allowing and thousands of trees were slightly injured and bruised.

killed there and a number wounded, all colored. All the buildings on Pruin's place were demolished and two negro children killed. The residence of T. A. and J. A. Archibald was totally wrecked with all the outbuildings. A number of other houses were badly damaged. Miles of fencing and thousands of trees were prostrated. Dozens of people were slightly injured and bruised.

C. Herrin and B. W. Coiner spoke for the prosecution and Judge Epler and Colonel Lewis for the defense. The case of the benefits to be derived from allowing the passengers to get a sight of the magnifi ent and multi-horse power shoe, box and icle or its real estate informant. No Portdiction of an insane asylum, would think of such a thing. The Dalles can justly boast of the best hotel accommodation of any city of its size in Eastern Oregon. And this is putting it mildly. The Umatilla House, built at an original cost of $60,000, would alone accommodate more guests than two hotels like that of the handsome one in the "queenly city" of Pendleton; not to speak of the New Columbia, the Skibbe or the European House. Whatever The Dalles may lack, and it lacks many things, it is not hotel accommodation. McGINTY.
