bered among the poets also, if even so good a judge as Wordsworth may decide, who in his "Excursion" tells us

"O, many are the poets that are sown By Nature! Men endowed with high est gifts, The vision and the faculty divine, Yet wanting the accomplishment of verse."

To most persons, it must be admitted, a poet wanting the accomplishment of verse is something of an anomaly, though every one is aware of the much-disputed question as to just what it is that distinguishes proce from Friday afternoon at Wamic The evidence poetry. And in Ruskin's case at least we must admit with Stedmen that "fine prose is a higher form of expression than wretched verse," or, we will add, than even second-rate verse. In his "elements of drawing" he gives the advice: "Never read bad or common poetry, never write any poetry yourself; there is, perhaps, rather too much han too little in the world already." spot mentioned. The ball passed through the literature usually issued by such bodies, he was compelled to dissent from the than too little in the world already." own teachings as respects writing peetry, though he is not altogether lacking the "accomplishment of verse." He gained the Newdigate prize at Oxford in English poetry, and a volume of his poems has been published. The smallness of his contributions to English poetry, however, is not to be taken as indicative that he is not a poet any more than the refusal of a moderately good musician to play in the presence of Paderewski should be taken as evidence that the person refusing is not a musician. Ruskin's own words offer the best explanation. "Those who sincerely love poetry know too well the touch of the master's hands on the chords to fumble among them after him," he says in "Modern Painters," and these words offer the best explanation of the fact that Ruskin the poet
