The Silver Debate WASHINGTON, Sept. 1-The senate took up the house bill to repeal the silver-pur chase clause of the Sherman act with the | is defending the prisoners. Voorhees bill as a substitute. Vance of North Carolina, one of the minority ment bers of the finance committee, spoke in opposition to the bill and in favor of free coinage. A large part of his speech was devoted to showing the inconsistencies of the friends of repeal in both parties, in view of the bimetallic declarations of both the national platforms. He quoted from these, commenting in an ironical strain on the way in which the pledges were being fulfilled. He said they seemed to think the only way to maintain the parity between gold and silver was to first strike silver a deathblow, and unconditional repeal would be a death blow, for it was well known that Cieve. land would veto any silver coinage bill. following the destruction of half the curevery government which had demonetized premium. When comage stopped in India, the effort to have it stopped in the United States began, aided by the influ ence of the moneyed power of all the world and our government. If coinage stoaped here, silver would cease to live throughout the commercial nations of the earth. The fall in the price would be greater than that following the stoppage of comage in India. Repeal without a substitute meant an end of silver money for this generation unless a revolution of the people should restore it as it did after the fraudulent demonetization of 1873. Let no man doubt the proposed repeal was the result of a conspiracy among the money-holders of the world. He declared the Sherman law did not drive out gold, else why did gold return with it still in force. The Democratic platform, he said, denounced the Sherman act as a cowardly makeshift, yet this bill for its repeal, striking silver a harder blow, was more cowardly and more of a makeshift He closed with a declaration for the free coinage of silver. After a discussion as to the relative parliamentary status of he silver repeal bill and substitute, unanimous consent was asked for the adop tion of the substitute pro forma, and to have all the amendments treated as mendments to the substitute. Cockrell objected on the ground that the house bill was preferable to the sub stitute. The discussion is still progress-

The Boatner amendment providing for Grosvenor of Ohio offered an amendrency committee from reporting at any time a bill to repeal the tax on state bank circulation. After it became evident it would be vigorously opposed, he Springer offered an amendment which gave cloture powers to the committees which have the right to report at any time; voted down without division. Hepburn of Iows offered an amendment requiring the speaker to recognize the member who first addressed him any subject; lost.

Such disturbances are al-ways welcome, and the melody will live on to oblivion. "He that hath no music in his soul is fit for strategy and spoils" divine William gave utterance to in his immortal Albany Democrat: A peculiarity of the forest fires up the Santiam is the fact that mostly old stumps and dry leaves etc. are being burned, while the green and valuable timber is not injured. The Democrat is informed that little or no damage has been done. It was reported that the Santiam Lumber company had lost a good many thousand dollars' worth of timber; but Mr. Brown, the Albany member of the company, states that no damage at all has been done to the company's property. The present fire in that vicinity started from a cabin, which was burned.
