But Mr. Denson forgets that the Unionists and sound protectionists, every one of them-became Republicans in 1861. And Mr. Beltzhoover Democratic party may have resolved Dr. Watt was called and attended to his in favor of protection to American insuperlatively good, but by the extremely prosperous condition of manufacturers, which excited the groundless envy of some of the labor leaders, the Democratic party threw off all pretensions to admiration of protection, superlatively good, but by the exand declared in convention for free trade, pure and simple.

The result is not only known but felt. Smokeless chimaeys, tenantless factories, unemployed men, famishing women and children, are evidences of the success of the Democratic party in luring the irritated workmen to vote for its candidates. The workmen have repented. Have Congressmen Beltzhover and Denson repented? They say that they accepted the platform with this mental reservation—"as it is with this mental reservation-"as it is even speak to a Missourian. to be interpreted by Cleveland and the according to the plain meaning of the resolution. The workmen say that they voted with the Democrats believing that their tariff resolution was mere buncombe. They have discovered that it was in sad earnest, and having so discovered they have made their recantation by voting with the Republicans in all the recent elections. Denson and Beltzhoover have discovered that Cleveland is favorable to the resolution as it stood in the platform, that he is not a Jackson Democrat but they would be a submitted to the next term of the circuit court in this city, at which the case will be adjudicated.

Yet the industries by which their constituents live can be protected only by the adoption of a soundly Republican policy. No Democrat, no combination of Democrats, in congress can secure protection to any one industry. It is only a bold defection of whole, by Democratic demand for its recommittal, that an alliance can be effected with the Republican minority for the salvation of the country.
