HILL AND DEMOCRACY.

It was David B. Hill,of New York. who, during the campaign in 1892, immortalized the saying, "I am a Dem ocrat," which he used in one of his speeches, and since that time it has been frequently quoted as significant of the man and his political preferences. Every word that has emanated from him since has been clothed with an air of sanctity to Democrats, and by every means to prove that protecthe genuineness of his political faith tion does not protect, and are using cannot be questioned. It was Democevery possible subterfuge to delude the people into the belief that the Wilson racy for him to oppose the appointment of Hornblower and Peckham to bill now before the senate is very fathe supreme bench, and if any quesvorable to the industrial interests of tion is raised regarding his actions in the country. The tariff bill will not glide through he senate as smoothly as it did through the house. Democrats are already beginning to inject into it certain doses of protection, and when it reaches a vote it will not be the Wilson bill. The depression now being suffered in the country is causing many to fall away from the articles of political faith adopted by Democrats in convention in Chicago in 1892, and if hard times continue until 1896 all poltical organizations will be in favor of high protective duties.

Mr. Gladstone visited the queen vesterday, and tendered to her his portfolio of office. Lord Roseberry has been summoned to Windsor, and will undoubtedly receive the premiership what the American gets 51 cents for, from the hands of her majesty. It is
