In the revival of the silver debate which recent circumstances and political movements have called to the surface, old fallacies are being revamped. One of these is, that "the money power," as the populists term all moneyed interests, profits by the prostration of the national finances. It is wise to leaven all political argument with reason—that is no argument that is not reasonable. A little thought by those who would flood the country with cheap currency and state bank issues, and make the silver craze the national policy, will convince them, if they are open to reason, that their charge is illogical, truthfully remarks the Sacramento Record-Union. Without at all championing the so called "moneyed interest," any one can see, who will, that in whatever befalls a nation the "moneyed interest" would be the greatest sufferer. In every national interest this has been plainly written-moneyed interests find their highest good in the greatest prosperty of the people. It is not possible to find in history any denial of this. There may be, doubtless are, capitalized interests that for the time may take a narrower view, but never long, or in any number sufficient to effect a state policy. Wherever there is money investment there is, as a rule, the clear conviction, fortified by experience of the past and the commonest reason of the present, that injury to material interests of the people, industrial, productive or otherwise, is injury to capitalized interests, no matter what their form. Those moneyed men who oppose the silver craze ought to be given other interests to the menace of danger. It is the demand for dilution of the circulating medium that alarms it, and makes it voice its protest. All such debate as that now revived ought to proceed upon principle, and not seek strength in vituperation, abuse and the calling of hard names. Some of the brawling leaders in the silver craze, however, deal in nothing so much as denunciation and imputation of insincerity of everyone who does not out of hand accept their dogmas.

Robbery of a Store.

This morning between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock the hardware store of Messrs. Mays & Crowe was entered from the back door of the workshop, and from there entrance was effected into the store by removing an axe handle that held the lower sash of a double window down, and then sliding it up. From the store were taken five revolvers and one improved Winchester rifle. Mr. Ralph Gibons, one of the might policemen, gives the following particulars:

At the time mentioned he was walking up Third or Fourth street when he heard some one whistle, and believing that Policeman Schooling wanted him he hurried to the place from whence the sound proceeded, and at the corner of the alley in the rear of Mays & Crowe's store he saw a man standing with a Winchester rifle in his hand, and towards the center of the block, on the side street, another ing was quite largely attended, and we understand the receipts were very liberal. moonlight was very bright and Mr Gib. ons readily recognized them. As soon as he came opposite the men, Hawthorne, who stood on the corner, called to him to halt and throw up his hands. To this Ralph objected, and asked what they wanted with him. The man who first talked to Gibons told him "he had it in for him." Ralph inquired what he had done. Hawthorne said, "You remember two years ago." At this Gibons pulled his pistol and fired, but, his gun did not hit the man. Then two shots were fired at Ralph, and three persons ran from the store down Third street. Ralph ran through the alley and fired one shot at the robbers as they passed down Third street They must have secreted their horses somewhere in the west end of the city, as they were on foot and ran in thadirection.
