

AMERICAN LAND OWNERS.

The bulletin just issued by the census office giving the principal results of the investigation as to the farms and homes owned by the people in all the states and territories is very interesting and significant.

The number of families in the whole country is given as 12,269,125. As the total population in June, 1930, was 23,262,220, the date of the census was 62,622,200, it is seen that there is an average of a fraction over five to a family.

Nearly 48 per cent of the 12,269,125 families, say 5,880,000, or on their farms and homes, but the actual number of persons owning and residing on land is somewhat larger, being 6,066,417.

The segregated statistics of land ownership among the farmers is especially interesting and significant. The total number of farm families is given as 4,676,174, which would represent a population of about 23,400,000, something over one-third of the total population of the country.

The statistics of mortgages do not bear out the wild assertions of the professional and political calumny howlers who went about the country two or three years ago proclaiming the poverty and distress of the oppressed farmers.

Indiana passed through the city daily en route to the hop fields of the Yastina. In the latter part of the season, the hop harvest has been very good and the farmers are well pleased.

Of shooting with "unloaded" guns there is no end. Ernest Dewart, a gunner of Mrs. C. J. In some manner the gun was discharged, and a heavy charge of shot struck Ernest Dewart's eye, killing him instantly. No one knew the eye was loaded.

School Reports.

DUFRESNE, Sept. 7, 1934. In the preceding articles we have made a short presentation of the rules or laws of the school, based upon the latest practicality, regularity, attention and effort; we shall now treat of the efficacy of morality.

A system of duties pertaining to the school, of both teacher and pupil, involves the exercise of all the benevolent affections of our nature, and the suppression of all the malevolent. It is not enough that we shall not steal; we must not covet. It is not enough that we shall not lie; we must not misrepresent. It is not enough that we must not swear; the thought of bitterness and condemnation to such forms should be far from us. The moralities with the emphasis of temperance, forbearance, cleanliness, courtesy, with many others, make up a noble manhood and womanhood that it should be the duty of the home, of society and of the school to develop.

The school alone cannot accomplish this work; it has a powerful influence in the habits of silence, self-control, attention, punctuality, regularity and industry. By being thrown into the society of his equal, the youth learns to respect the rights of others and to maintain his own; he learns his natural subordination to law and necessary authority; he learns the consequences of wrong doing, as well as the rewards of doing right. Now listen. Good discipline at school is good teaching, loving, firm, moral parents at home, good companionship at home, good literature and healthy occupation, and you have attained the highest perfection of your work; the remainder belongs to the minor and the church.

A great deal that is valuable and much that is important subject of the school, moral parents at home, good companionship at home, good literature and healthy occupation, and you have attained the highest perfection of your work; the remainder belongs to the minor and the church.

I have now presented a system of rules for school government that is comprehensive, leaving no part of the work to be guessed at, except it might be claimed I have missed the very important subject of manners. Take the rule of morality, do right, the best interpretation of manners is to do the right thing, at the right time, in the right way. So here our rules cover this.

We have made this presentation to show young teachers that there is a system, a guidance for them; that they should not go into the school room with haphazard methods so often used, but should systematize or at in order all that they do. Demand punctuality, regularity, attention, effort, right speech, right action.

Representative Herndon's bill, which has now become a law, providing limitations for proofs in donation land claims in Oregon, Washington and Idaho, provides that claimants to such lands have until January 1, 1936, the right to make final proofs, in default of which the claims are held to be abandoned. Notices are to be published in the proper local districts requiring claimants, their heirs or trustees, to make a final proof within the time prescribed, and failing to do so, the lands will be restored to the public domain.
