In the submission of the constitution to a vote of the people the convention called for an expression on three separate propositions. First, the main body of the document; second, the new apportionment; third, the provision on the best utilazation of the Erie canal. It is a matter of congratulation to the west, quite as much as to that state, that this feature of the constitution was adopted. Whatever tends to entor in cheap transportation for grain is clearly in the interest of the graingrowing western states.

The apportionment was a districting of the state from a Republican point of view, and in a way to correct with a sharp turn the Democratic apwas fought against strongly by the party, as was natural, but it carried by a good round majority. It divided the state into fifty squatorial districts, each entitled to one senator. The state is also divided into 150 assembly districts, each entitled to one member. Each county has at least one member of the house, except that Hamilton county is combined with Fulton. New York county has thirty-five members. The division of counties having more than one member of the house is to be made under general legislaton to be enacted this winter by the several enacted this enacted enacted enacted the enacted e tution provides safeguards against gerrymandering.

The state of New York is to be congratulated upon the wisdom shown by the framers of this constitution, and upon the good sense of the people in adopting the whole of it.
