A gov to pass the Carlisle bill is due largely ernment of the people and by the peoto a desire to be rid of the responsiple requires some conservative element bility of maintaining specie payments, not dependent directly upon the whims says the Ineer Ocean. With the govof voters at the ballot box, and the ernment legal-tender notes converted senate supplies this. It is a sort of into interest-bearing bonds, which is balance wheel on legislation by the the fundamental feature of the finaulower house, which comes from the cial policy of the administration, the people every two years, and it should government would need gold only for the payment of the interest on its remain bonds. The burden of keeping our paper money on a specie basis would be shifted from the government to the banks. The grand object in view, primarily seems to be to get out from under the load of specie-payment responsibility.

The Carlisle plan is a trap covered with leaves. The bill was drawn in such a way as to conceal its real characier so far as possible. But the trap has two batts. To the goldstes it offers national banks on a strictly gold basis, and to the silverites state banks on a silver basis. The former is expressly stated. The latter required no special provision, for in providing a currency based on gold alone and another currency based on specie, without mentioning gold or silver, provision is practicelly made for two distinct currencies. It would be for the interest of the gold banks to have gold go to a prenium, for their bills would go up proportionally, and as soon as there was any premium on gold the banks which could redeem in silver or gold, at their own option, would use in redemption silver only. There is no guess work about this.

It is true that the act of 1870 did authorize the formation of national banks for the purpose of issuing notes payable in gold, but under a restriction which amounts to a prohibition The amount issued must not be over 80 per cent of the par value of the bonds deposited, instead of 90 per cent, as in the case of ordinary bank notes.

When the old regime is resumed business will again be brisk and times prosperous. Then the silver question will not be agitated, and we shall hear nothing more about unlimited coinage or the United States being able to maintain a standard of its own against the commercial world. There have been several attempts to create fiat money, and any expansion of the currency amounts to this; but every one has been a disastrous failure. The financial policy of a nation should be established on a safe basis, and no country can mark out one for itself irrespective of the principles adopted by others. This discrimination against gold note is left out of the Carlisle bill, and practically that is just the difference between encouraging and prohibiting. The American people want all their paper money redeemable in either gold or silver, at the option of the holder of the same. That is genuine bimetallism, which is the bed-rock principle of finance, which the United States demands and which the Republican party really stands for. If by false pretenses and cunning concealment a system should be adopted which would put the two precious metals on radically different foundations, and create two different kinds of bank notes, one commanding a premium and the other suffering a discount, then let the Demooracy prepare for a rebuke in 1896 more overwhelming than the one of 1894. The people went with free trade in 1892 with their eyes open. The Wilson bill was only the carrying out of the will of the people as expressed in 1892. The people changed their mind, as they clearly had a right to do. But the Carlisle bill is a conpoint they desire to attain. fidence game, and it is dangerous business for a political party to attempt to bunko the people.
