DROWNED AT THE LOCKS.

Accident at the Cascade Locks and Heroic Attempt at Rescue. Yesterday afternoon about 1 o'clock Mrs. Schrouden, a widow woman who lives near Stephenson, Wash., fell off the incline near the boat landing and was drowned before she could be rescued. She had been on board the Regulator selling berries, when, on returning to the Locks she walked on the outer edge of the ties and missed her footing and fell into the river. The double track on the incline was occupied by cars of the portage railroad, and the space between was hardly suf-ficent to admit of the passage of a per-son. This induced her to go around and take the outside walk, and the pace being very narrow caused her to lip and fall. As soon as it was known t proving not long enough, let it go nd threw him another rope. The cur-that she was in the water the first of-ficer, Mr. Chas Alden, tied a rope around him, jumped into the river and swam manfully to her rescue. The deck hand having hold of the line which Mr. Alden had tied to his person, rent was very strong, and by the most strenuous exertions he could not get nearer the woman than about ten feet. Finally he became exhausted, and began to sink. A boat was lowered, and he was pulled from the river after he had sunk about a foot below the surface. When taken out he was almost unconscious, and suffered from retching during the remainder of the day The woman remained on the surface for a short time, but when the boat was lowered she had sunk below the surface and could not be seen Mrs. Schrouden was a young woman about 25 years old, and her husband lied at Stevenson about a year ago. Every effort was made to recover the body; but without success up to the time of the Regulator leaving at 3 o'clock. The event has cast a shade f gloom over that community.

So Caroline Died.

Caroline, she of the majestic figure and arid throat has gone over the river into the happy hunting ground pro-vided for her race. There, let us hope she will be judged not according to her deeds but her lights. She was a re-markable woman for an Indian, both physically and intellectually, being of egal hight, and mentally far superior o her race. She was about fifty years old and was known by everybody in the country. The victim of the white mans vices, she took early to hard drink, and had put enough whisky in-side her copper-colored skin to pass for still. As an all around fighter she had few equals and no superiors, being able to knock out any half dozen of her tribe and a few white men thrown in, when she got on her muscle, and was, in fact, a regular copper-colored cyclone from Celilo. But her battles and her bottles here have been fought, and the end came in the jail which to her was about a home. The fierce wild nature is stilled, and the moccasinwith nature is stiffed, and the mocasin-covered feet pointed skyward today in the undertaking rooms, as she sub-mitted, for the first time peacefully to be sat upon. More sinned against than sinning, she has passed over to the whither, laid low by the wiles of her dusky brethren, two of whom lie is tall agreement. in fail awaiting examination. She was found last night about 6 o'clock at the corner of First and Washington streets by Watchman Connelly. At that time she was accusing an Indian of poisoning her, and in a few moments she fell to the sidewalk in convulsions. She claimed at the time two Indians had poisoned her, and the assertion seems to be borne out by her death which occurred in the jail an hour later. Poor old Caroline! Victim of circumstances, and of surroundings. The earth in the Potters field will open, and close over her, the west wind will whisper through the pines, the night owl will hoot over her head; over her, who, living would not stand Columbia will continue its dashings the salmon will run yet again, son time, by Celilo, where first her infan-tile feet made dainty tracks in the met through the rich pinkness of the royal chinook. The seasons will come and go, the leaves will fall, and the zephyrs light out for Grant, but never, never again shall the red forked light, ning from the white man's still gurgle down that patrician neck, never, never shall hard cider bite or Jamaicaginger deceive to her hurt, or flavoring extracts and burning fluid seek to mingle, in harmony beneath the mid-sections of her calico gown. crowd, the side walks being lined with Youth, Beauty and Intelligence as the big elephants and other wild brutes went by. There was a little excite-ment just as the parade started, caused thy a couple of elephants getting away from their keeper. They made things ilvely for awhile, but one of them was soon caught. The other was in ugly season will improve the prospects for the winter. There are some very good fields of alfalfa. All ranges are suffertemper but was gotton in subjugation without any damage being done. Rumor says that Ed. Howell, the night baggage man slipped up on him and checked his trunk, and so he had to follow it or lose it. The circus in the afternoon was well attended, though the crowd was not as large as that which greeted the Syndicate show on the 6th of last mouth. The trapeze work and the tight rope performance were exceptionally good, and the little Japs did some fine work. The pink and yellow lemonade was in big de-mand owing to the intense heat which was literally in-tents, and the big palm was literally in-tents, and the big palm leaf fans were in evidence every where. The reserved seats were properly named, being reserved for the torment and punishment of the individual who bought them. Each seat had a raised platform the size of a pie-plate, and every individual one of them was guaranteed to be, and was, a misfit. Right behind the rack we were on, sat a half dozen girls, and we could here them giggle and enjoy themselves, as we squirmed into a new and more sole-rending position. The circus was good, but if this individual reporter ever attends another, it will only be when Nature and filling years have provided him with more flesh, or his financial condition will permit him to purchase a feather bed to take along with him. To add to the discomforts of the situation and put insult on top of personal injury, a brawny fellow touched us at the door as we came out and tried to sell us a box of corn salve. However, it is a thing of the past, the circus has come leaf fans were in evidence every where thing of the past, the circus has come and gone, and the small boy is happy as he practices the hand-spring and standing on his head between swims There was little gambling going on, which was one of the best features of the whole affair.

Moabus, J. Foster L. Stevens and F. H. Hill were examined. The testimony showed that Caroline was first discovered in company with two Indians at the corner of The Dalles Lumbering Co.'s building. She was screaming and apparently in great pain at the time. She accused the Indians of giving her "the stuff" which was at first supposed to be poison, but which she afterwards said was cider. Dr. Eshelman thought at first she had be refused:

Elephantine Ficitemen

During the parade this morning two of the large elephants became enraged at each other, and broke away from the procession. They cleared the thoroughfare on Second street as they came down, and one team of horses ran away breaking the wagon to which they were attached. It created considerable excitement for a little while; but it soon quited down and no further damage was done. Many people ran off the walk into stores, and others up stairs to be out of the way. The larger elephant was an angry animal, and appeared to have a desire to wreck vengeance on the keeper, who eluded him in every possible way. It seems that this monstrous quadruped had been "nursing his wrath to keep it warm" for several days, and this morning before the procession formed began to show his ill-humor. It was reported at one time that the keeper of the elephant was killed in the melee; but upon inquiry it was found not to rest on any foundation. The keeper was badly scared at the time, and jumped into the basement of the old building on the corner of Second and

A Grand Parade. The parade of the Great Wallac Shows this forenoon was a fine display in every department, and attracted a large crowd of men, women and children. The horses were excellent in shape and movement, there were two bands of musicians, the elephants were large, and the wild beasts, lions, tigers and leopards were everything that could be represented, the carriages appeared new and gorgeous, and there were many attaches. It was in every regard what have been expected of a first-class circus, such as rarely visit towns as far west as The Dalles. Shows this forenoon was a fine display

Just What's Needed Exclaims thousands of people who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla at this season of the year, and who have noted the success of the medicine in giving them relief from that tired feeling, waning appetite and state of extreme exhaustion after the close confinement of a long winter season, the busy time attendant upon a large and pressing business during the spring months and with vacation time yet some weeks dis-tant. It is then that the building-up powers of Hood's Sarsaparilla are fully appreciated. It seems perfectly adapted to overcome that prostration caused by change of season, climate or ife, and while it tones and sustains he system, it purifies and vitalizes the blood,
