"It looks as if the profits of the bazaar magnates were not to be increased much longer by the oppression of the work-girl. The outcry made by the merchants who found that the bazaars were stamping their lives out has arroused the armies of clerks in the 'department stores' to a sense of their own situation. In a neighboring city where the bazaar system has been carried to a very exalted pitch thousands of girls, it is said, are getting ready to strike against a system which crushes them down to four dollars a week, as wages for phenomenally long hours. It makes little difference to our business men how many lines are constructed. This furnishes an outlet to the sea by means of the Columbia river, and no railroad can compete with cheap water transportation, If our capitalists had the proper enterprise this city would be the terminus of several branches of railroad to the interior—the more the better—and the gateway city would be the centre of trade for a region of country larger than is tributary to any point in the Inland Empire. The possibilities of growth and development of this city with an open river to tidewater are almost unlimited, and the next few years will prove whether our people will take the tide at its flood or drift on at low water mark as they

I am quite sure you never met such a devil as this one. He draws and drags a man with ropes; he parches his throat and sets it on fire; he makes him gasp and catch his breath. When he arrives one is like a man lost in a hot and sandy desert. He gives him a bottle heavenly bottle with liquor, and then bids him drink and be happy. They talk of fighting such a devil, I don't think anyone ever did combat such a fiend. You remember Christian's fight with Appollyon in the valley. Well, if Appollyon had a fiery furnace to ram down Christian's throat, and then a bottle of liquor to give him, Appollyon would have won. When this devil
