SATURDAY ... SEPTEMBER 28, 1896 THE FOULEST CRIME. The Durrant case drags along slowly, but day by day the state's attorney is drawing the net tighter around the defendant, and the testimony tending to show his guilt is slowly but steadily accumulating. It has been shown that the testimony of the school girls that they saw Blanche Lamont get on a street car with stranger on that fatal 3d of April, and in the Wallowa jail, and the sheriff that they identified Durrant as that stranger is correct. The testimony of the venerable Mrs. Crosset settles that. She swears that on the 3d of April she rode on that car with Durrant; that she got off the car at the same time he and the school girl accompanying him did, and that on reaching the sidewalk he introduced the girl to her as Miss Blanche Lamont. This was less than two hours before the time when Organist King saw Durrant when he came down from the belfry of Emanuel church, where the body of the poor girl was afterwards found. The venerable lady says that at the time she could not help but notice Durrant's actions. She knew him well, and her impression was that he had been drinking. His eyes were bloodshot, and she observed a flippancy in his manner that was unusual in him. She inquired when she arStatesman has ceased to be riled at rived home if "Theo" had taken to the allusions made concerning the drinking. An hour, or an hour and a half, after her meeting with Durrant evidently thinks there is nothing in a he was seen by King coming down from the belfry, gasping for breath, staggering, horrisled. He said he had been fixing the gas pipes and had been overcome by the gas, and sent for a bottle or bromo-seltzer-a nerve tonic. That night at a meeting in the church he asked Mrs. Vogel, with whom Blanche lived, if she, Blanche, was not coming to the meeting. He had never inquired concerning Blanche before. He persistently denied having seen or been with Blanche Lamont on the 3d of April, but now his attorneys admit that he was with her, but that he left her on the car. He was the last person seen with her. He was seen to leave the car with her, to go to the church with her, and from that time until the murdered body of Mamie Kelley was found in the library of the church two weeks later her fate was unknown. Then a systematic search revealed the body of the miss ing Blanche Lamont in the belfry of the church—the belfry from which the organist, King, saw Durrant come staggering and overcome the evening the girl disappeared. It was a horrible crime, and a fiend from hell might well have come gasping and horrorstricken from its commission. When the murderer's cruel hands closed round the slender throat of the innocent and defenseless girl; when with the strength of despair she struggled for her virtue and her life, as her torn clothing shows she did struggle, and when at last her slender strength ter trapping yielded to the brutal clutch upon her throat and she sank limp and lifeless to the floor-when after all this the vile brute insulted the dead and unresisting body, and clambered down, down from the gloom, from the horror he had left behind, and stood where once more the light of God's sunshine smote him as rods of steel, no wonder that he gasped for breath, and sank almost fainting on the floor. How memory must have conjured up the picture of that fair young face that but an hour before had smiled at him! How every motion of that supple body, every glance, every word that dropped om those confiding lips must have risen up to torture him with the vision of that lifeless thing from which he had just fled, and whose soul alone had escaped his defiling touch. And yet after this, we are are told this fiend repeated his crime, and took the life of another innocent child. We confess that it is impossible for us to believe that aught in human shape could have gone through a second experience like that, willingly; hence cannot bring ourself to believe that the same hand committed both murders. The cunning shown in the first murder was entirely lacking in the second. In the case of Blanche Lamont, the murderer showed the cunning of a madman. The body was so disposed of as to have practically defied detection. The clothing was hidden in nooks and corners in such a manner that it took hours for the busy earchers to unearth them. In the whatever at concealment. Had the ame person killed Mamie Kelley that murdered Blanche Lamont, would not hiding the body? If he carried the body of Blanche Lamont up the steep stairway of the belfry, why did he not also carry the lighter body of little Mamie Kelley up the same stairway? We believe Durrant murdered Blanche Lamont, but does it seem possible that could have committed the other erime? And vet, if he is guilty, as we believe him to be, he cannot be measured by anything possessing human attributes. The testimony of witesses, the model of the belfry, nay! even the touch of the dead girl's garments as they were carried by him, of a muscle, or the drooping of an eyelid of that cold and impassive face If he is guilty of both murders then

BUSINESS IMPROVING

General trade throughout the United States shows further improvement this week, more particulary in manufactur ing and commercial lines in the east and south. In South Atlantic, Gulf and Southwestern states and on the Pacific coast, general trade has been increasing in volume, with improving support of favorable conditions are this week's heavily inlargest week's aggregate of wheat ex-ports within three months; the heaviest week's shipments of Indian corn in 17 months; the maintenance at its full proportions of the extraordinarily heavy demand for iron and steel, and the significant hardening of leading money markets, accompanied by re-ports of increasing mercantile dis-favorable from the holders' point of view, advances having been recorded in wheat, corn and oats, after a prolonged reaction in wheat, flour, raw and refined sugar, coffee, cotton goods, leather and turpentine. A special in-quiry by Bradstreet's into prices for more than 100 staple products show that in the second quarter of the cur-rent calendaryear there were advances in quotations, 56; no change, 17, and lower price, 28.

Wheat exports, both coasts, United States and Canada, aggregate 2,538,000 bushels this week (flour included as wheat,) a gain of one-third over last week, but in contrast with 3,537,000 bushels one year ago, 4,727,000 bushels two years ago and 3,811,000 bushels in the same week in 1892. New York and Montreal and the Pacific coast shipped more freely. The exports of Indian corn aggregate 1,645,000 bushels this week, twice what was sent out last week, a much larger quantity than in the like week in preceeding years, and the heaviest week's total since April,
