Notwithstanding the perfect weather and interesting programme for Saturday, the attendance at the fair ground was not nearly so large as it was the previous day, yet those who were on the grounds were fully repaid, for they were well entertained, in fact some of the races were the best of the entire fair: and the parade of premium stock was an exhibit that should have attracted every admirer of blooded anmals from far and near. The parade was not large as to numbers, but what it lacked in quantity was made up in quality. Both the horses and cattle hat were brought on the track at 1

A Pathetic Ending

Mr. John Irvine accompanied by his daughter Annie, will leave tomorrow morning for Los Angelos, California to remain during the winter. Mr. Irvine will take his wife as far as Salem, where she will be left in the hospital of the asylum. She is partially paralyzed, and hopelessly insane, though her insanity is of a mild form It is indeed a pathetic ending of a noble life. In 1850, the now aged couple settled on what has ever since been known as the Irvine place, on Chenowith creek three miles west of this city, taking one of the first donation land claims. Hand in hand they shared the dangers and vicissitudes of pioneer life, only in their old days to meet with misfortune and reverses, that left them almost as poor as when nearly 50 years ago they turned their faces toward the setting sun to seek a home in the remote wilderness of Oregon. Here for nearly half a century the good couple have been known and respected, and it is indeed hard that they should be separated and made to tread the last few miles of the journey alone. There are some things more dread than final dissolution, and death is sometimes most unkind in being lenient.

Mr. Gray is one of the committee appointed by Governor Lord to raise funds for providing the battleship Oregon with some suitable testi monial, and is now here in furtherance of the work. The committee after due consideration concluded to attempt to raise the money necessary, from, or rather through the efforts of the school children. We commented on this scheme, recently and somewhat adversely to it. When the captain called on us this morning, however, we were forced to admit, that we on that occasion simply suggested a theory of how not to do it, which, by the way, is

The End of the Fair. The District Fair closed today, after an unusually successful meeting. The attendance has been large, the stock exhibits first class, and the racing the best ever known here. The pavilion exhibit was a great improvement over former years, and the artistic arrangement of the innumerable exhibits speak in the strongest terms of the ability of both exhibitors and snperintendents. The music every evening at the pavilion was thoroughly enjoyed by all, and was one of the most excellent features of the meeting. Of course there are many disappointed ones with regard to the premium awards, but as there were more exhibits than premiums this was a certain result. The fruit exhibit was composed largely of apples, it being rather late for most other fruits, but of these the display was magnificient, and quite a collection of them will be sent to the exposition at Portland. Taken all in all the fair has been a success, but until our people realize its importance, and attend from all parts of the district, it will not be on the plane where it belongs.
