Indians Citizenship a Failure The act of the government in granting the Indians the rights of citizenship, and especially the right to buy intoxicants has been severely criticize by many and justly too, for this is a privilege Indians will naturally abuse.

"An Indian was found dead at noon

Wednesday's East Oregonian:

Sunday about a mile from town on the Tutuilla road. O. P. Bowman brought first word to the officers at the court house, and C. O. White found the dead Indian at about the same time. The body lay inside the barbwire fence on death when first approached. The coroner went to the place and found a track over which, it was plainly to be seen, someone had dragged the body from the middle of the road where the Indian had fallen from his horse. The body was dragged to the fence and then under it, as was proven by the finding of a portion of his clothing hanging to the barbs of the lower wire. The theory formed was that he left town in mpany with other drunken Indians and, when he fell, his companions find him."

A Success. The exercises at the carnival Saturday night were even more entertain ing than they were the first evening. The programme, with the exception of the quartet, was rendered in full, and everything passed of pleasantly. Taken altogether, the carnival was a grand success, both in the feature of an entertainment and as a financial venture, the net receipts being $113, which will be given to the Endeavor Society of the Christian church. Those who managed the carnival cerit is to be hoped that this may not be their last effort in this line.

A Pleasant Party. The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Young was enlivened Monday night by merry prattle and laughter of a bevy manner of amusing games until refreshments were served at 9 o'clock. The lunch was disposed of with that relish only known to youth and vigor, and at 10 the happy throng bid their young hostess a pleasant good night, were Rosie Buchler, Mamie Buchler, Willie Ulrich, Josie Keller, Katie Bar-

BIG IRRIGATION SCHEMES.

The Water of Hood River to be Utili Experience has taught the numer ous farmers and fruit growers o Hood River valley that the lands of that section are more productive when irrigated, and as a result of this experience two large irrigation scheme have been inaugurated. The East Side Water Supply Co. and the East Fork Irrigation Co. have been consolidated under the name of the Fast Fork Irrigation Co. The new organization will commence operations at once con structing ditches and flooms. This ditch will cover all the tillible land on the east side of the valley, and when completed will furnish sufficient water to irrigate every farm in that section. On the west side of the river prepar ations are being made to construct a ditch and floom that will carry 5000 inches of water, which is estimated to be sufficient to irrigate from 5000 to 8000 scres of land. To construct the necssary flooms for this immense ditch 200,000 feet of lumber will be required, and Mr. Frank Davenport has begun erecting a mill on the river with which to supply the lumber. When these irrigation schemes are perfected, what the producing power of Hood River valley will be is almost beyond conjecture. Already it is the garden spot of Eastern Oregon; but when 20,000 acres of such fruit land is brought under systematic irrigation that valley will undoubtedly become one of the greatest fruit producing sections of the world. And the Lights Went Out. Shortly after 10 o'clock Friday night when amusements throughout the city were at their highest, suddenly and without warning, the machinery in the electric light power house refused to work, and the city was left in utter darkness. There was a fizzle and a sputter, then all was over so far as light was concerned, and everything was enwrapped in sable blackness. At the Armory, one of the most interesting features of the carnival was interrupted; the games in which the members of Union Whist club were engaged had just reached that point where every player's anxiety was wrought to the highest tension, and Miss Freeman, at the Baldwin, was using every effort to bewitch Guy Miller with a lovely little song, when darkness spread out its mantle and brought tion for a time. Coal oil lamps, however, were brought into requisition. and the "play went merrily on," so no one was materially inconvenienced by the lights going out. Working Old Mines Many of the old mines in Southern Oregon that were supposed to have been worked out years ago, are being worked over with good results. Concerning the activity in this line the Grants Pass Courier save: "The new civilization is making the old diggings of Southern Oregon ring as they never did, even in the palmiest days of '56 when probably 5000 miners were digging and prospecting in the confines of what is now Josephine county. The old gravel beds which even the Chinanen could not work to advantage in early days, are now being manipulated by modern processes, and the output of

Glad hope and tenetrous despair —George Edgar Montgomery,

ACQUITTED BY ACCIDENT. BY HENRY FIELDING. The case to be tried was one of arson -a capital offense at the period to which this story relates-and the prisoner at the bar was one of the best known young men of the town in which he resided, by name Walter Hood. He had a widowed mother dependent upon him for support, to whom he was devoted, and in most respects his conduct was irreproachable. The trial commenced and we twelve men took our seats in the jury box. Of the eleven men with me there was only one whom I did not like to see there. That was Harvy Dudley, a darkfaced, sinister looking fellow, and to me in many ways objectionable. knew that young Hood had an incipi ent failing. He was becoming addicted to drinking, and had been known, while so excited, to visit questionable resorts It was for the burning of one of these houses that he had been apprehended. I knew further that it was this Harv Dudley who had been his most constant companion; who had done more than anyone else to lead him astray and who had accompanied him to these undesirable haunts. I could only account for his being on the jury on the hypothesis that Walter yet regarded him as his friend, but, nevertheless, determined to watch him. The trial commenced and as the evi dence for the prosecution proceeded I was fairly startled. One witness after unother gave testimony, some of them very reluctantly, but all pointing to the prisoner as the guilty party credible witnesses swore that they had heard him swear he would burn the house down; others heard him say re peatedly that he wished it were burned down. Then came others who had seen him lurking about the premises on the night of the fire. On the score of motive it was shown, on his own admission, that he had been ill-treated in the house and that he had said he would have revenge; furthermore, it was proved that he had been heard to say that the salvation of his soul depended upon the destruction of the house Next came testimony stronger still.

The fire had originated in a back other stuff for kindling were kept. Entrance had been gained by means of a back window, which had been partly pried open with a stout knife, and on the floor had been found the blade of a knife which had been found the blade of a knife which had been found in Walter's pocketbook, to use as a torch in setting fire to the place.

Hd. E. No. 3635, for the SWM and SM SWM, Sec. 31, Tp. 2 N, R. 13 E.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon and cultivation of said land, viz.:

William Jorden basement room, where shavings and knife which had been broken off in the efforts to raise the sash. That blade was recognized as belonging to a knife the prisoner had owned. A maker of cutlery had made that knife for him and positively identified it. And this was not all. The floor of the basement was damp, and some of the outer shavings to which the light had been applied had not burned, and just at the edge, where the fire commenced, lay a piece of paper, rolled up and half burned. From the position in which it lay and its appearance it was evident that this piece of paper had been ignited by match and then applied to the shavings. The shavings had blazed up at once, but the piece of paper lying on the damp floor had not wholly burned up. This piece of paper was found to be a part of a letter addressed to the prisoner and re-ceived by him only a week before. The case looked very dark. Many witnesses were willing to testify to the prisoner's good qualities, but no one could swear that he was not dissipated and degraded. That house had been to him indeed an infernal region. Finally the prisoner was allowed to speak for himself. He said that he had threatened to burn the house down; that he had said all that he had been sworn to and that he was around the house on the night of the fire-indeed he was not ten rods off when the flames burst forth and he was one of the first to give the alarm. He had uttered one cry of "fire" when he noticed where the fire was and the thought came to him that if he was found he might be suspected of having started it, so he ran away. He also said that three nights before the fire he had been in the house and robbed of everything his pockets contained, including forty dollars in money and some valuable papers. He had gone there on the night of the fire in the hope of getting something back, but seeing some one enter whom he did not wish to encounter he hung about awaiting that person's departure. That was an hour before the fire broke out, but of setting the place on fire he was innocent; he knew nothing of it, and clasping his hands, with his tearless eyes raised to Heaven, he called on God I knew Walter; I knew him so well that from that moment I believed him innocent. I knew his very soul, and I knew there was no falsehood in the

"My boy is innocent! My boy is in-I heard the cry and saw his poor old nother, almost broken-hearted, sink ack fainting into the arms of her companion. All this, however, had little ffect on the spectators. The prisoner's course of dissipation; his many threats against the house, and the very fact that he had been robbed there were heavy against him. The attorneys delivered their pleas and the judge gave his charge. He told us, of course, that if there was a lingering doubt in our minds we must give the prisoner the benefit of it; but I could plainly see that there was not the least shadow of doubt in his mind. The jury were conducted to our room and locked up. A silence of some minutes occurred, which Harvy was the first to break. "Well," said he; "I s'pose there ain't any need of our being here a great while. Of course, we all know the prisoner must have set fire to the place.'

There was something in his manne as he said this which excited my curiosity. I will not say it was suspicio then, but my curiosity. He spoke with a forced effort at calmness, and the more I looked at him the more I became nervous and uneasy. I wondered why he should be so anxious to get rid o the case and have Walter convicted. I knew he had also frequented the house and that he had also done much towards tempting Walter into dissipation, and knew, from what Walter had told me, that he was in that house when the rob bery had taken place.

Presently the foreman suggested that we should each take a piece of paper and write down our opinion and then compare notes. I went to my overcost, which was hanging on a rack with the rest, and took out a sheet of paper. I had got half way back to the table when I found that I had got half a letter from any cost. I was about to turn head when the name of about to turn back when the name of the writer caught my eye. It was signed Samuel Lasalle, and immediately above the signature I read these

"And now, dear Walter, if not for your own yet for your dear mother's sake, let me hope you will do better."

I started as if I had been shot. I had n my hands the other half of the sheet which had been used in the burned house. I went back to the rack and found I had taken the paper from Har vy Dudley's coat. I looked to see if I had been observed; I had not. I put the piece of paper back and took an other piece from my own coat, which was hanging near. Then I returned to the table and sat down. Harvy occupied a place beside me. He had already written his opinion and had taken out knife to sharpen his pencil.

"Let me take your knife for ment, please," I said to him. Without hesitation he handed it ! me. It was Walter Hood's knife-the large blade was gone! I had all I could do to restrain myself, but having sharpened my fencil I returned the knife to him with a mere thank you. I learned afterwards that the accident of his hav ing that knife in his possession was attributable to the fact that he had no worn that pair of trousers since the night of the fire, and now used the knife without remembering the loss it had sustained doing a very peculiar piece of work, to the execution of which it had been made subservient. After deliberating some ten minutes or so it was ascertained that eleven of the jury were bent upon returning verdict of guilty, though most were fa vorable to recommending the prisone to mercy. But Harvy was inexorable

He would extend no mercy. Presently I started up and pretende to be faint and asked to be excused for few minutes. I kicked at the door it belonged. Harvy jumped up and would have seized it, but he was held back. Word was sent to the judge that the jury sould not agree. We were summoned and discharged, and ther Harvy was searched, the knife being found in his possession, and his be havior at once exposed his guilt. A new jury was impaneled and Walter was acquitted. Shortly afterwards Harvy was tried and it was plainly proved that he had set fire to the house; that the woman who kept it was to have been burned in it, as he had locked her in one of the 100ms before setting fire to the place because she had incurred his displeas ure in some way, and this was his revenge. Not only she, but two of the girls living with her had suspected him from the first, but they dared not complain lest he should not be found guilty, and then would be sure to murder them.

The hardened villain confessed his guilt after he had been condemned, and then it was that been condemned, and then it was that her held been condemned, and then it was that her held been condemned, and then it was that he had been condemned, and then it was that her held been condemned, and then it was that her held been condemned to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before Register and Receiver, at The Dalles, ORE.

Notice is hereby given that the following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and the made before Register and Receiver, at The Dalles, ORE. then it was that he told how he hap-he did not notice what it was, and even when the burnt half was produced in court he had entirely forgotten that he had put the other half in his pocket, as he must have done. As to the knife, he had also taken that from Walter's pocket and put it in his own, using it on the night of the fire to pry open the window, and then, broken as it was, returned it to his pocket without think-ng anything more about it. Thus was Walter saved by an accilent and Harvy sent to his due punishment; and the moral of the story is that, while a youth can make all the good resolutions thought can suggest, yet if he continues on with evil compan ionship he is not safe. Banner of Gol

SHERIFF'S SALE.

DY VIRTUE of an execution and order of sale of Oregon for Wasco County, upon a decree and judgment, made, rendered and entered by said coure on the 12th day of November, 1895, in favor of the plaintiff, in a suit wherein the First National Bank, of The Dalles, Oregon, a corporation, was plaintiff, and J. C. Baldwin, Ellen D. Baldwin and Sigmund Stern, were defendants, and to me directed and delivertd, commanding me to levy upon and sell the lands and the sheriff came. He let me out, and when we had gained a safe distance I told him what I had discovered. He went away and brought back the district attorney and Walter's counsel. I told them what I had seen and explained Harvy's conduct in the jury room, his former connection with the prisoner and his known character. The lawyers retired for a little while and came back attended by a constable and a freshly-drawn paper. They desired me to point out the coat immediately on entering the room, and together we went in.

I pointed out the coat, the sheriff taking it and demanding to know to whom it belonged. Harvy jumped up and would have seized it, but he was held
