However, the senate committee does not diminish the aggregate of torpedo boats in the bill, as it adds two new Holland submarine craft. And the house may consent to this provision since it depends on a successful test of the submarine boat now building. The extension of the time limit for contracting for the ships authorized from 90 to 120 days is commendable. Again we find that the important addition of 1.000 enlisted men to the navy is concurred in; and although the provision for 500 more marines is stricken out, the senate committee's action is doubtless based on the fact that Secretary Herbert did not, in his report, ask for this latter increase.

We find preserved, too, the import ant provisions for reserve guns and projectiles for the navy and the auxilary cruisers, and for addition torpedoes. and they are even suplemented by an item of $50,000 for testing methods of throwing high explosives from ordinary guns on board ships.

In brief, while in details the senate committee has made some changes, the great result is a substantial concurrence in the most important features of The house bill already noted.
