How Human Hair Is Prepared in Paris

From an industrial and artistic point the houses that manufacture exclusive ly for the export trade, the city num bers about two thousand hairdressers supply of the hair may be divided into three categories. The hair of the first category is furnished by foreign countries, India and China being the ties. The hair from India and China undergoes quite a lengthy preparation It is first matched, sorted and combed and then immersed in a solution of soft soap and carbonate of soda, in this bath it is united root end to root end and formed into locks that are tied near the roots. It yet remains to render the hair thin and flexible. To this effect it is first placed in earthen pans filled with chlorureted water and water mixed with hydrochloric acid. which renders it thin and decolorizes of soft soap and chlorate of potash, in order to render it less brittle. Final-in a bath prepared with a decoction of nutgalls or Campeachy wood, in which sulphate of iron is dissolved and into which a little sumae is put, in order to give it a luster and remove the bluish tint peculiar to the hair of the dead. Finally, it is blesched by immersing it in several baths of oxygenated water to which a few drops of ammonia have been added. Thus prepared, the Chinese or Hindoo hair is sold to the hair dressers, who work it to their fancy, and afterward sell it at more or less moderate prices. The finest hair, forming the second category, is that of France, and comprises a variety of shades exceeding a hundred. The most beautiful is furnished by Limousin, Brittany, Normandy and Beauce. Some lots are derived from young ladies' boarding schools and from convents. All this is collected by traveling men called cutters, who make their circuit toward spring, and visit the villages to gather their crop. In some localities of Brittany and Auvergne, on certain market days, the damsels who desire to sell their head of hair get up on a cask, undo their hair and allow it to fall over their shoulders. An auction soon begins, and every lot, as soon as cut, is delivered to the highest bidder for spot cash. This product does not pass into the bath, but is simply combed and then secured with buckwheat flour. Finally, the third category comprises hair (which, it must be confessed, is classed among the most esteemed) de rived from the sorting of combings collected by rag-pickers, who stuff it into bags just as they find it, soiled by dust, felted by water, and adhering to the sweepings of houses, and sell it to small manufacturers, who undertake to utilize it.

HAIL FORMED BY TORNADOES. The Result of Whirlwinds in the Atmos The fact that hail is formed at an ndefinite but, in most cases, a great height above the surface of the earth, No Trouble to Show Goods. and that it is commonly precipitated when storms are raging, has prevented any direct observation of the process of freezing the vapor of the atmosphere into ice pellets or large masses, and what has been decided regarding the phenomena of hailstorms is almost wholly the work of theory and logic.

Nevertheless some points are pretty clearly established.

In the first place, hail is the result,

as a rule, of whirling or tornado-like storms. There may be no whirling on the surface of the earth but, according to the Cleveland Leader, it seems cer tain that in the higher regions of the air, where hail is formed, there is always an atmospheric disturbance resembling what is commonly called a cyclone when it sweeps the ground. A curious indication of the soundness of this conclusion was to be noted the other afternoon, when the storm which wrought such havoe with skylights had passed by. Out over the lake there was a great mass of cloud, very high and dark, which had the form of an oval race track of enormous propor-tions. It might easily have been fifty miles in length and two-thirds that distance in width. The formation of the cloud mass was noticeably such as might have resulted from the violent whirling around a moving center of the whole bulk of cloud vapor. The ap-pearance of the sky was thoroughly in harmony with the accepted theory of the formation of hail. It is believed that the nucleus of a large hailstone is asually a bit of snow or snow-like ice, which falls from the snow strata, or level, above the rain level, into the latter, and is caught up with a cloud of raindrops and mists into the higher freezing regions of the atmosphere by the force of a whirlwind. The rain and water in the form of mist, which clings to the snow nucleus, or touches it as it is whirled swiftly up into the intense cold, freezes around it as clear and solid ice. HOOKED A BEE MARTEN. He Was Fishing for Trout, But Got a Bite of Another Sort.

"A strange thing happened to me when I was trout fishing last year up in northern New York," said Andrew Bishop, of Bridgeport, Conn., to a Washington Star man. "The fish were very wary, the stream was narrow, and the pools were but lightly bordered with bushes or cover of any kind, consequently when I would reach a promsing looking spot I would get as far from the bank as possible, and at the same time be able to drop my fly over in the water. I had followed this plan with poor success, getting only one or two strikes in as many hours, when suddenly my line began to run out with a whirr. No trout had ever carried off fly for me in such a way before, and I was nonpiussed, but in a moment I saw that it was not a fish that was making my reel sing. Rising from the surface of the stream and flying above it was a bee marten which had gobbled my fly as I cast it over the bank, and he was making away with it. The bird soon had nearly all my line out, and not earing to lose it, I began to play him as I would play a fish. He struggled gamely, fluttered helplessly to the ground, and I released him. You may think that's
