Hugh Gonriay ED. TIMES-MOUNTAINEER: It does seem a little hard on Hugh Gourlay that his seccond essey should be spoiled in much the same manner as the first. Mr. Tom Reed's frank admission that "it wouldn'd work" queered the first, and now Mr. Gourlay uns counter the big Oregonian, which in its leading editorial of the 18th itst. (same date as his last) answers an honest seeker after truth who asked "why we cannot have free coinage of silver at 16 to 1 just as we used to have it before 1873;" this being the very question than half of the Sherman county wheat raised by my last letter, and there seeming to be some "meat" in its answer, and none of the "sounding brass and tinkling cymbal" business, with Mr. Gourlay's permission I will examine the Oregonian's answer. The people are seeking facts in this campaign, not fancies; and we must appeal to their reason, not their imagination. The Oregonian draws some remark-and 1853 which I think the wording and spirit of the law does not warrant. It says: "The gold standard bad been purposely adopted in 1834 and confirmed by the acts of 1837 and 1853, and the silver dollar, practically obsolete, because worth too much, but which had republicans will organize a Bryan club | been left 'hanging in the air' so to speak, was ommitted from the revised

able conclusions from the acts of 1837

code of 1873.' Now let's look into those coinage laws and see if they bear out this construction for if they do the Oregonian is right in its final summing up, against the old style dollar, but if not true, then the premises on which it bases all its proof failing, that alleged proof is worse than nothing, and only hurts the cause it advocates.

It is not denied I believe (except, perhaps, by Mr. Hugh Gourlay) that the first coinage act (1792) established a unit of value, an arbitrary thing called a dollar, and designated that it should contain a fixed number of grains of silver, at a fixed ratio of 15 to 1, by that as a standard, nor is it questioned that bimetalism was the intention of this act. It seems to me the better proved by it, from the fact that the U. S. was not then a silver producing country to any extent, and a high ratio or valuation would tend to bring silver in from beyond our borders, but it seems that actual experience taught that the bid was too high, for silver was not offered for coinage freely; to correct this, in 1834 the ratio was changed from 15 to 1 to 16, 002 to 1, but was gold made the standard? Hardly, when the actual fact is that to conform to the standard silver dollar, at the new ratio, the gold coins were recoined, the gold in a gold dollar being reduced from 24.7 grains to 23.2 grains, while the silver dollar was unaltered. To deny this is to deny history, is it not a stretch of imagination to think this a "gold standard purposly

Soon thereafter other nations inspired by a similar power, as we think, took a like action, since then silver which had for so long been at a slight premium, began falling, steadily by jerks, so to speak, relatively to gold, and yet by a singular process of reasoning, we are told that the scales are single action, the one side goes down without the other going up.

Be this as it may, however, it seems to me that the Oregonian fails to prove its position by its forced interpretation of the early coinage laws. Mr. Hugh Gourlay's effort, while purporting to be discussion of the same question, scatters wonderfully, and seems more of a band wagon performance than a serious investigation of the subject. One of his statements; however, is remarkable, it is where he says that "it is not true that our monetary unit was a silver dollar," and to prove this, asserts that it was the "intention" to have the law read "this dollar to consist of 3711 grains of pure silver or 271 grains of pure gold." If this proves anything, it is that Mr. Gourlay would be a wonderful success as a mindreader or second-sight man. We are not told however, how our early lawmakers allowed the statute to be misprinted, as it must have been if Mr.

Gourlay is correct. The meeting was called to order by President Story, and after the appointnent of a number of committees and disposing of the routine business of the club, Thomas Harlan, of Moster, was invited to address the meeting. Mr. Harlan said he had been a life long republican, having assisted to or-

A party of Ed Hill's friends and asso ciates congregated at his residence Friday night to celebrate his return from Prineville, where he has been visiting for some time past, and gave him a most complete surprise. The evening however was none the less pleasantly spent by Mr. Hill than by those who sought to entertain him, and all who were present pronounce it an enjoyable affair. The amusements consisted of songs and games, and the discussion of an elegant spread, in which an abundance of elegant fruit was conspicuous. Those present were Misses Ethel Deming, Nellie Sylvester, Lolah Ewbank, Edythe Randall, Hilda Beck, Maie Barnett, Melissa Hill and Bertha Hill, Messrs. H. D. Parkins, Freas Saunders, Ed Michell, C. O. Bunker, Frank Wood, Ed Hill, Mr. Carlson and Mr. Sailor.

assembled at the court house and reor panized the McKinley club of Th ness men of the city to interest themselves in the organization and management of the campaign, "since it is a matter in which they are directly interested." Mr. Wilson then introduced J. W. Ivey, of Portland, who has recently been campaigning in Crook county. Mr. Ivey excused himself from making a set speech on the grounds that he was worn out by his trip into the interior. Then Mr. Wilson stated that the call for the meeting had been signed by 347 legal voters of The Dalles precincts, and insisted that the club be reorganized by the election of new officers, and called for nominations for president. Geo Ruch was placed in nomination, but declined sented, and before Mr. Crowe could have an opportunity to decline, he was elected by acclamation. The other officers elected were, J. G. Farley, secestary, and A. M. Kelsay assistant secretary. The meeting was then adlressed by Hugh Gourlay and W. H. H. Dufur, and finally adjourned about 19 o'clock to meet next Friday evening.
