Those parts of the platform censuring the decision of the supreme court for its decision in the income tax case, and denouncing the interference of federal courts in matters belonging to states received special attention. The speaker took the position that if the platform was seditious, those justices of the supreme court who dissented to the opinion of the court were also seditious, and read from the opinions of the four dissenting judges. He also took the position that whenever any one of the departments of government shall have attained such sacredness that it is above criticism, our free institutions will be threatened. In discussing the financial question, which he held was the paramount issue of this campaign, Mr. Jeffreys held that silver had not depreciated appreciably, but that gold had appreciated, and that under free coinage of silver in this country, the prices of the two metals would not

WASCO AT THE EXPOSITION Her Exhibit of Fruits and Vegetables Best of All

Those who have attended the Portland exposition are unanimous in declaring that Wasco county leads all others in the exhibition of fruits and vegetables. The display of apples, pears, grapes, prunes, egg plant, melons and octatoes from this county are by ar the best on exhibition in the building, and attract special attention. The fine exhibit which Wasco county is making has been prepared by Mr. Schanno, and to him much credit is due for the energy he has displayed in bringing our exhibits before the visitors to the exposition. An idea of the effect our exhibits is having in Portland can be gained from the following item that appeared in today's Ore-

DRIVEN TO SUICIDE. Love and Business Troubles Were More Than He Could Endure.

Last Saturday the body of an old nan named Johnson was found hanging to a tree near his house one-fourth of a mile from Cascade Locks, apparently having been hanging there several days. From appearance Johnson had climbed into the tree, tied one end of a rope around his neck and the other to a limb, then proceeded to chop off the limb on which he was standing, and had fallen in such a manner that his neck was broken. All surroundings indicated that it was a case of premeditated suicide, and such was the verdict of the coroner's jury empanneled by Justice Aldrich to inquire into the cause of his death.

Johnson was a Swede and about 50 years of age. He owned a small farm near Cascade Locks and was also engaged in fishing. Of late he has appeared despondent, his fishing business having proven disastrous this year, and it is also stated that the refusal of a young lady to marry him added to his sorrow. The two troubles seem to have worked upon his mind until he sought to end his life.

One More Ploneer Gone. At noon Monday James Henry Hermans passed away, after an illness of two weeks. Mr. Hermans was born in Albany, New York, March 1, 1828, and came to California in 1849 on the bark Chase, commanded by Capt. Rickerson of New Bedford, Mass. In 1850 he came to Oregon on the first steamer that reached Portland, in company with the Bradfords, who settled at Cascades, on the Washington side. He located a claim on Hermans' creek, where he resided for many years, but was also engaged in steamboating on the Columbia river during early days. Mr. Hermans took an active part in aiding the settlers at the time of the Cascade massacre, and it was through his efforts that the steamer May was saved from the Indians. After the massacre Mr. Hermans located at The Dalles, and for some time owned and operated the ferry across the river at this place. For some years past he has conducted a small store on First street and has confined himself closely to its management.

In dress, style, make-up, action and speech, she is said to be the counterpart of the genuine article. Originality and novelty, as well as heart interest of the play, are its chief and salient features. Everything has been furnished by a liberal management to enhance its success. A plendid company and elegant scenery re both provided. Comedy is not lacking by any means, and lovers of music, song and dance, and other specsalties, can be equally well suited.

In fact it is said the principal cause for the great success of the play can be attributed to the many varied and pleasing surprises in drama, comedy and vandeville in store for those who witness its production.
