JOHN GAVIN, Prin. RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS.

Lydell Baker, clerk of the board of railroad commissioners, was in the city vesterday for a few hours. In conversation with him a reporter of the Statesman elicited the following statement of the case of the board: The railroad commissioners expec to remain in their positions and draw their salaries for another year. They claim that, as the supreme court decided their case in their favor two years ago, they have the right to remain in office until their successors are elected and have qualified, or until the offices are abolished. Neither having been done, they will remain in office and will continue to do their work and draw their salaries.

The fact that the governor does not approve their newly-filed bonds doesn't worry these gentlemen in the least, as their old bondsmen are not released and those instruments still being on file and valid, the non-approval of the new papers filed matters nothing to them, and they will continue in their soft places for another two years, unless a special session of the legislature should abolish the law creating them .- Salem Statesman.
