THE PENSION SYSTEM.

In view of the impending war clouds all over the civilized world, and especially in view of the present absurd bellicose attitude of Spain toward this country, there seems to be pressing need of an immediate interpretation by our lawmakers in congress of some clear-definition of the relation of pensioners to military service in future wars; and it is strange that a note of warning has never yet been sounded by our great leaders of thought, through the metropolitan press, on the subject.

We all know by experience, that when the war is over, it will be too late for clear and cool judgment to prevail in this matter. Then a people, grateful to their brave defenders (and other potent agencies) with allow sentiment to predominate over caution, but now it could be, and should be, an easy matter. A pension for disabling wounds received in battle defending our country, should be a mark of honor, second only to that "red hadge of carnage," the scar itself: and the pensioner ought to receive enough, should he need it, to keep him in comfort. safe from all fear of want. But that there is something radically wrong with our present system no man sees or is more ready to admit, yea more, to condemn, than the crippled and disabled veteran of the civil war, many of whom are compelled to subsist on what appears a mere pittance, being physically unable to carn more, while others who need it not. but are technically entitled, receive and squander an almost equal amount.

We cast no reflection upon the pensioner, he is not to blame, but the system is directly at fault. It is the system under which pensions are granted that we denounce. And this, in view of our impending trouble with a foreign country, is enough to cause any patriotic American to think of the after porbabilities of a war that might call forth all the fighting force of the land. We are a fighting people; we came of fighting stock, and would perhaps be fighting now but for a restraining hand under which we become very restive. Today, if necessity should arise, we could easily put into the field an effective/force of 2,500,000 men with a reserve of an equal number. This
