The Dalles certainly is a first-class field for a good steam laundry, one that would do perfect work at reasononable prices. Those who are posted say that the Portland laundries that have branch offices here collect on an average $250 a month in the city. That money, outside of commissions, all goes away, beyer to return, but could be retained in the city if there were a first-class laundry here.

Nothing has yet developed to establish the identity of the man who was found dead by the roadside in Dry Hollow on March 17th, though an incident has occurred that might lead to his identity.
