The Natives of That Country Are Far Be hind Us in Their Ideas. discipline, but on the contrary a good deal of noise. It was "a noisy mansion." But he was so pleasant himself, and made the work so pleasant, that pupils could not help learning. Being near him seemed to make them wiser and better. It was an instance of what Carlyle calls true education "soul coming in contact with soul."

One of the greatest luxuries he en joyed was to find some of his pupils able and willing to take up the higher branches. His leisure hours were de voted most heartily to them. He stave after the usual school time to teach them Euclid and trigonometry. He led them out on the Saturdays along the shore, through the quarries and up the Binn, to teach them geology. He invited them to his house of a winter evening to see the stars through his The only examination was the yearly one by the presbytery, and it was so purely a matter of form that it was not an ordeal. NO LANGUAGE NEEDED. Instances Which Seem to Sustain the Contention of Certain Savants Those who contend we could get on without a language may add another story to prove their point, says the Leeds Mercury. Everybody knows that in many cases it is not the words used but the manner of speaking which makes the impression. Thus it was that Duniel O'Connell was able to make a market dame rage and storm by calling her a hypothenuse triangle. Some Swedish ambassadors having to present an address to Louis XVI., which they had forgotten, recited the whole of their catechism, and that did just as well. Prof. Drummond tells us in his "Tropical Africa" he was in a similar fix, and got out of it in a similar way. On one occasion four of his carriers ran away. There were three others of the same tribe in the company, and though the professor knew nothing of their dialect, he determined to teach hem a lesson. Beginning with a few general remarks on the heathen, he briefly sketched the geology of Africa and then broke into an impassioned de feuse of the British constitution. The three tribesmen trembled like aspens. monition was that the men became the most faithful he had.

UNUSED TO DIRECTORIES. Difficulty of a Countryman in Finding a

A countryman drifted into one of the Main street railway offices and said: "The policeman outside thar told me vuh had a direction book of the town in here." The busy but polite clerk indicated the directory, and the countryman stared. He opened it doubtfully, says the Buffalo Commercial, and turned a few pages. "Name of everybody in town in here?" he ventured "Guess so, pretty nearly," replied the clerk, smiling. "They may have skipped an odd name here and there, but the skips are few." The countryman went back to his book and the clerk to his work. After 15 or 20 minutes the clerk saw the countryman was still puzzling over the directory and stepped over to where he stood. "What name are you looking for?" he asked. "Roberts Brothers," answered the rustic. The clerk glanced at the place where the countryman was looking and nearly had a fit. The fellow had started at the beginning of the book and was

The Bone Was Bent. A case entirely new to medical science came under the observation of the physicians at the Maryland university hospital recently. James Tymon was the patient, and he was afflicted in a most peculiar way. Tymon is employed at the bakery of D. W. Lord, and is 19 years of age. While at work he accidentally fell upon his right arm. He felt an acute pain in the member as if it had been fractured. The pain was intense, and finally Tymon's employers sent him to the hospital, where he was examined by the physicians in charge. To their surprise they discovered that instead of being broken the bone of the forearm was bent so as to form almost a circle, and was firm in that position. It was something that the physicians had not met with before. It is supposed that the bone had

The ball took place in the Hungarian town of Temesvar, preceded by a concert, the audienc listening at loud-speaking telephones fixed against the wall round the room to a military band which was playing in Arad, to operatic selections given by artistes in the theaters at Budapest. and to popular songs which were being given in Szegedin. Then the room was cleared, and hundreds of young people danced for hours to music played in all these towns.

Co., New York. F FOUR KINDS UP WOUDS All Parts of One Tree Now Growing on the Elk River, Missouri.
Four miles from Pineville, Mo., on the grounds of J. L. Parish, is a freak of nature so curious that if I had not seen it with my own eyes I could scarcly have believed it possible, says a writer in the Kansas City Times. On the bank of Elk river rises a large tree that towers high above the neighboring trees. At the ground a solid, buttress trunk appears, from eight to ten feet in diameter. A little higher than a man's head this high trunk divides into four lesser trunks, the two smaller of which are in themselves fair-sized trees, while the other two are far above the average size. Here comes in the queer part of the story. Of these divergent trunks the two larger ones are respectively an elm and a sycamore, while the two smaller ones are an oak and a sycamore. Above the union of common trunk each tree, in leaf, branch and bark, is normal to its type. The trunk itself seems one homo genous whole. I would not presume to say that close examination would not show in the bark from different sec tions of the trunk those peculiarities that distinguish the bark of one tree from that of another, but certainly these characteristics do not show on cursory examination, nor are their lines of jointure visible where the four trunks coalesce. I doubt if anyone can point to a stranger growth than thistwo sycamores, an oak and an elm, all growing from one common trunk. This meeting together of four youthful tree trunks as they thickened with age is occasionally seen, but this is an unuthat is to say, no one of them has been wholly enveloped by another. Hence a careful investigation ought to disclose a slight line where the incurving bark of each original tree meets.
