How to Make the Popular Book-Shaped The simple, always popular, book-shaped frames, to hold two, four, six or even more photographs, are useful. They may be covered with almost any kind of material, though of course the handsomer the material chosen, the more dainty the results will be. These frames may be closed like a book to lie on a table, thereby taking the place of the obsolete album, or they may so as to exhibit the pictures they contain. It is almost necessary to buy the foundations for these fram pearly impossible for a novice to cut out the cardboard and have it perfecty exact, and unless they are exact they are not at all pretty. The foundations are sold for a few cents apiece, and consist of two pieces of heavy card-board for each division or leaf of the book. The back and front are the same in size, eight inches by six, but the front piece has an opening 51/2 inches by 3% for the picture. For a frame capable of holding four pictures, eight pieces of cardboard will be required, four of which must have the opening as already described. There will also be necessary half a yard of material, 27 tches wide a sheet of batting, a sheet of white watered paper and some good glue. Begin by making the back of the

To do this divide the silk lengthwise, so that there will be two pieces, each 27 inches long. From the end of each for subsequent use. Extend one of the But Time Brought Changes at the Sam-25-inch pieces, right side down, on the table. Place a layer of batting over the silk, and on the batting adjust at equal distances the four back pieces, allowing sufficient space between each to permit the frame to be folded in book form. Then turn the edges of the material being used for the cover and the batting over the back pieces and give firmly in place. The end pieces of the than infested the place. The landlord silk are now brought into use. Divide was a leader in the church and made a them through the center, so that there will be four pieces, although only three are to be used. These pieces are to be glued in neatly between the card-boards to hide the exposed batting at the hinges. The tops and bottoms of these strips will be, of course, turned under so as to avoid raw edges. To finish the backs glue over the cards pieces of watered paper, covering the ends of the silk which have been previously glued to the boards. The object of this is to give the frame a finished apshes the back of the book frame, and it may be laid away to dry while the front pieces are being covered. To cover the front pieces proceed in the same way, omitting the batting. When all are covered glue them in position to the back pieces, leaving the bottom free to admit the photographs; place under a heavy weight and let remain under pressure for 24 hours, so that China silk, crepe, duck, denim and embroidered linen are all used in the manufacture of these useful photograph holders. Pretty frames of this sort may be made as gifts for friends, or brothers, sisters or cousins who are at college, utilizing the college colors when selecting the covering; yellow and white for Bryn Mawr, rose and gray for Vassar, Wellesley, orange and black for Princeon, crimson for Harvard, dark blue for Yale, carnelian and white for Cornell, blue and white for Columbia, purple and white for Amherst, red and blue for Pennsylvania, brown and white for Brown and black and blue for Johns
