Deepest Spot in the Ocean Nearly Six

For 20 years or more the deepest spot in the ocean has been supposed to be to the northeast of Japan, says the New York Journal. There the bottom lies 4,655 fathoms down, or more than five miles beneath the surface of the waves.

In the latest hydrographer's report of admiralty surveys, made by the British government, this ocean record, which has stood so long, is beaten, for there is official information of a deeper sounding than has hitherto been made. The deepest spot in the ocean, so far as known at present, has been found to be in the neighborhood of the Friendly and Kermadee islands, in the Southern Pacific. Here the maximum depth is 5,155 fathoms, or close upon six miles. The observation, made by the officers on board the British ship Penguin, is all the more interesting for the fact that it bears out the result of previous re-

BEST WOOL MARKET IN OREGON

Wool Rates Higher in The Dalles Than at any Other Place in the State. Pendleton, Heppner and Baker City have been attracting attention as weol markets this season, but they must stand aside when compared with The Dalles. Already there are in the neighborhood of 6,000,000 pounds stored here, and the prices prevailing at present are from one to one and onehalf cents higher here than at any other place east of the Casoades. A large quantity of wool changed hands here yesterday at prices ranging from 101 to 111 cents, and holders anticipate still higher prices before the season shall close These high prices are attributed to two causes, the quantity of wool stored here, affording buyers a large range of goods to select from, and the low freight rates obtainable from this point. the beginning of the next year, the mother salmon ascends the rivers to deposit her eggs, and thus to secure the outinuance of her race. In connection with this periodical visit or visits to the river must be mentioned, says Chamer's Journal, a very curious fact. The idea is entertained very strongly by some authorities that a salmon invari ably returns to its native river or that in which it is bred. It has even been asserted by fishermen that, when several rivers enter the sea in one stream (as at Bonar bridge, for example), the salmon bred in each river will pass back into their own water and will avoid the strange streams. The late Frank Buckland, a strong believer in this instinct of the fish, regarded the sense of smell as that which led it to its native river. Perhars the truth is that for the most part salmon do return to their own river, but the practice and habit are not necessarily invariable. We know the fishes certainly swim great distances along coast lines where they are captured in stake and bag nets, and it may well be the case that now and then a fish will turn into a river that is near, in preference to seeking its own and distant water. Arrived in her river, the mother salmon begins to scoop out a kind of trench in the gravel of the stream. This she effects by plowing into the gravel with her body. This trench is to be the nursery of her young. The eggs are laid in the furrow, and are duly fertilized by the male saknon. Then the trench is filled in by the efforts of both parents, the eggs are covered with gravel, and searches, showing curiously enough as the mound thus formed is called, in fisheggs a mother salmon will deposit is, of course, a difficult question to determine, but a stock calculation maintains that she produces about 900 eggs for every pound she weighs. Each egg in its diameter measures about a quarter of an inch, and it is estimated that 25,000 eggs go to a gallon. Everybody Says So. Catching Snakes For Money It is reported that four or five Chinamen who are employed on the ranch of Pleas Bounds, on the Selah valley, have discovered a unique way of ad. ding several dollars a year to their wages, says the Yakima Republic. There are many rattlesnakes in the vicinity of the ranch, and the celestials capture all they can of them by means of a slip-not and a short stick, catching the reptiles around the throat When caught, they are dropped into a bottle containing alcohol, and then shipped to China in quantities. They say their net gain on each snake appreaches $5, which makes the narrative take front rank among the usual suake stories. Chinese doctors buy
