AS TO RESPIRATION.

cientific Tests to Ascertain the Proper Way to Breathe. Some interesting records on the ques tion of respiration have been compiled by Dr. W. Marcet, who has devoted the greater part of his life to the solution of problems connected with this subject. His investigations have not been confined to the laboratory, but have been conducted frequently in the open air to varying elevations, extending from the sea level to the summit of the highest Alpine ranges.

Beginning with normal breathing in a state of repose, experiments were made on forced or labor breathing. respiration under exercise, and respirasecords of the various conditions, an on the chart in horizontal lines the number of litres of air expired, and in ertical lines the time in minutes. The traces thus obtained differ considerably from those illustrating forced respiration, being much less deep, and reading alone, where the strain of the lungs is very feeble, the tracing returns parallel to the normal almost immediately after the exercise has come to an end. In singing, however, a marked differ ence was observed in the breathing when standing and when sitting. This difference is well worthy the attention of vocal students. When the singer sat lown the curve resembled that of the "forced breathing" almost exactly, which is not the case when standing,

This shows that the erect position is the correct one for singing. Another fact of interest to athletes and people who run for their trains was demonstrated. It is not general ly known that many people run a most be much lessened. The opening of internal lessons, which may be fatal in character, comes from the sudden cessa tion of effort. In case of extreme breathlessness, as would occur after running for a train, great relief would be experienced from taking a few deep breaths. - Chicago New ..

the speaker were: "A sunny sickroone that was entered by the sun one 24 hours, is desirable; patients pla on the south side in a hospital ward cover sooner, by ten days to a fe night, than those on the north al Plenty of light is beneficial, excep cases of brain disease. The less fur ture in the room the better, and to kee it clean a damp duster should be used instead of a dry one. The air must b kept as pure inside as outside, and ther was little or no risk about having the window open, top and bottom, if the petient were well covered, head included, and a good fire kept burning. Night air is not injurious; it is purer in a city after ten p. m. than at any other time, The bed should never be in a corner, but accessible from all points. In fever and surgical cases, a 'cradle' had sometimes to be used to keep off the weight of the bedelothes; an impromptu cradle could be made out of a bandbox, with the bottom knocked out. Bedmaking was the grammar and keystone of nursmake a good bed. It was important to et with decision when the time came for by hesitation or talking of what was to be done; to trend quietly, but firmly; not on tiptoe, and never to whisper to a third person. Every effort ought to be made to secure for the patient two hours' sleep before midnight. Amateur nurses often broke down through neglecting to take food when keeping watch through the night. - St. Louis though deeper than the normal. In The Czarina's Train the respiration assumed the form of hands of dilatory and inefficient dre breathing under exercse-but in talking itself cannot always command even its the most skilled workers of embroidery in the Russian convents were hard at work embroidering in delicate gold and silver on white satin the coronation train of the czarina. As it was so enornously long it had to be worked in separate pieces and sent to St. Petersburg to be pieced together. Judge of the conternation of the court medistes when he precious parcel was unwrapped. All the beautiful silver threads had turn to black! Not nihilists but corresive acidin the wrapping paper had caused the calamity and the empress of all the Russias had to be crowned in a comparative-
