A Tacoma dispatch dated Nov. 3d gives an account of a railroad about to be built from Tacoma to the Columbia river opposite The Dalles, which will likely be a paper road for the present at

The pispatch says: Colonel William Bailey, of New York, who bought the Tacoma & Lake Park railroad at auction several days ago, will extend the line to opposite The Dalles, on The Columbia river. The name of the road has been changed to the Tacoma & Columbia River railway. The road is of standard gauge, and now extends from Tacoma to Lake Park. It is intended to prosecute the work steadily all winter, and until the line is completed. A branch line will eventually be built to Mount Rainier. The exact route of the extension has

The whole civilized world is today provided with a very concise and comprehensive knowledge of atmospheric and precipitious changes, long before they occur. The science of foretelling hese changes as is evidenced by the accuracy whereby our numerous signal service stations forecast the various changes and approaching storms are phenomenal to say the least. But in nature there is undisputable evidences C F Lauer, impounding fees.... of sudden and severe changes that any one, though not versed in science, may readily observe.

Not only does nature warn us of im ending storm and sudden atmospheric hanges but also of prolonged storms, fact that abundant crops of vegetation, heavy foliage and particularially a the order to take effect on June 1, 1898. heavy crop of nuts, acorns, etc., always procede a long severe winter.

Thus the timely preparations of th domesticated animals and birds, guided by instinct, afford us unmistakable evidence of the extent of succeeding winters. Storms being a part of nature, it naturally follows that ample provisions are not wanting in localities most frequented by excessive changes for instance, the rain belt lying along and adjacent to the North Pacific coast, has a soil-adapted to long continued rain fall, whereas the same amount of precipitation under similar conditions in most of the interior districts would render cultivation impractable, besides causing innumerable ditches and washouts. Nature affords us ample evidence of her might, as well as her beauty, and her generous hand is not withheld from him who would seek her friendship. But be prepared to meet her this coming winter wearing her robe of "the beautiful" many feet in thick-

A Modest Demand Tuesday the widow of Jim Wesley an Indian who died suddenly in The Dalles about a year ago, appeared at the office of a well known notary in the city with a complaint that une of her horses had been run over and killed by a railroad train near Celllo. and requested that the notary put in a olsim for damages to the railroad company. Imagining that he saw in the case a fat fee, the notary at once prepared the claim, which was an elaborate document, and when it was completed asked the widow to state the amount of her damages. Now Mrs. Wesley is a good honest Indian, and heeds the admonition that "thou shalt not lie," and knowing that horseflesh is not overly valuable at present, fixed the damages at $2.50. This was a stunner for the notary, who had expected at least a $10 fee out of the job. If the claim is allowed, the squaw will still owe the solicitor $7.50 for his work, and as she is not a millionaire; in fact her whole estate is not valued at that amount, the notary will find it difficult to collect his bill. There is a firm in town that is running an auction store on Second street and catching people who have more money than business sagacity. Take it Like a Man. There is a descon in a certain church into which one Sunday a drunkard staggered and sat down. The preacher was discoursing about the present popular vices. Soon he exclaimed, "where is the drunkard?" The drunken man was just far enough gone to think the call personal, so rising heavily replied: "Here I am," and remained standing while the drunkard's fate and character were elequently portrayed. A few minutes later the minister reached another head in his discourse and asked, "where is the hypocrite?" Celonel Sinnott's generosity was preverbial. No man ever left his hotel home with the pangs of hunger gnawing at his vitals; and as the snows of winter silvered his hair and time furrowed lines on his kindly face, i was with the keenest pleasure that he at frequent intervals came to know that his generosity had not been for gotten. In this connection the following story is told:

In the early days a Hebrew peddler arrived in The Dalles with his pack. He was exhausted from his long tramp, and failure to dispose of his goods soon left him penniless and hungry. He appealed to Colonel Sinnott, who took him in. When he was ready to depart he offered the colonel all the money he had, about $6, in part pay ment of his account of about $20, but Colonel Sinnott refused it and sent him away. A few weeks later the peddler, having been more fortunate, remitted the amount in full and he passed out of the colonel's recollection.

Two days after the fire that almos wiped The Dalles out of existence Colonel Sinnott received a message from New York stating, "Wait for my letter," and signed Bloomenthal. With surprise he waited the arrival of the epistle. It came in due time and it stated the writer had read in the press dispatches of The Dalles fire and presumed that the hotel burned was Colonel Sinnott's. If so, the writer desired the colonel to apply to him for what money he needed and to use six figures if necessary. The letter went on to state that the writer was the Hebrew peddler whom the colonel had ssisted, who had worked himself up to the head of an extensive manufacturing enterprise. The colonel replied his hotel had not been burned and he was not financially distressed. give date on which they were ad-Mr. Bloomenthal replied that he stood | vertised: ready to assist him at any time and for any sum he might need.

THE OLD AND THE NEW STANDBY. Rates on the River

The principal object in view when the Regulator was built was to obtain relief from the excessive, freight rates then prevalent, and no one will dispute that this object was accomplished for the first three or four years of its existance, but at the moment its represeatatives laid the public good aside for private gain and personal profit, of which the affair savors, they forfeited their claim to the undivided support of the people. The news of the death at The Dalles, Or., of Colonel Sinnott will be received with pain by all in Idaho and elsewhere who knew him; and his friends were legion. Colonel Sinnott was one of the best known men in private life in the Pacific northwest. For more than a quarter of a century and up to the day of his death he was the host of that widely known hostelry, the Umatilla House at The Dalles, and in that capacity became acquainted with a reat many people who otherwise might never have known him. Colonel Sinuott was one of those men of whom it can be said the world is better for his having lived in it. The soul of onor, with a heart as tender as that of a woman, liberal even often to his personal disadvantage, he was loved
