Between The Dalles and Portland. For almost a year the Columbia river has been open to free navigation from The Dalles to the sea, but until recently this great water course has not been taken advantage of by foreign trans portation lines, the D. P. & A. N. Co. having had the only line of steamers on the river until a little more than a month, when the Ione was put on the route between here and Portland. Probably it will not result in any material reduction in freight rates but it will make a marked difference n the passenger traffic so far as The Dalles is concerned. The O. R. & N Co. having connections with eastern lines will be in a position to offer ourists a ride on the river will neces sitate their stopping in The Dalles s few hours at least, and the city will thus come into more or less prominence by being seen by thousands of people, who under present arrangements, pass through on the trains, never seeing The Dalles at all. When Last night five cars of cattle were the Christian Endeavors visited the coast last snmmer, comparatively few visited the Dalles, because there was not through connection to the east ex cept such as necessitated a layoff here for a day, but had the O. line of boats on the river then the Endeavors would have visited The Dalles and this will be the outcome with tourists in the future. But now there is a prospect of still another competitive line, the O. R. & N. Co., having determined to put boats or the line. Concerning this determina tion, the Oregonian of Saturday says: "The primary object of the service on the middle river is to attract tourists. Of the thousands of well-totour, probably not one in 50 makes the water trip to The Dalles, which affords the most magnificent combination of mountain, river and forest scenery in the world. This fact will be widely advertised in the East all winter, in anticipation of a very large tourist ride through the Cascade locks is of itself no every-day experience, and no doubt there are many Oregonians who will find the trip attractive. Through passengers will be given the choice of rail or river route to and from The Datles, and time cards will be so arranged that boats will connect with trains. "Incidentally, freight traffic will not be overlooked. The little valleys on the north shore of the Columbia have been filling up of late, and there s considerable local business. It is probable that the steamer T. J. THROUGH CALIFORNIA.

An Interesting Illustrated Talk on an Is teresting Subject. The lecture delivered Saturday evening in the Congregational church by Miss Kelleher was one that was intensly entertaining and instructive. Miss Kelleher is an extremely pleasing speaker, and is perfectly conversant with the subjects which she discusses. She first approached her hearers at the Union depot at Portland, and for a time called their attention to the facilities offered by transportation lines for carrying travelers over the great Northwest. She invited their attention to an elegantly apportioned day coach on the Southern Pacific, and then took them on a flying jaunt toward the south, making the first stop at Medford, a splendid birds-oye view of which place was thrown upon the canvass. From there the audience was carried over the Siskiyous and shown the magnificent scenery along the route of travel-the numerous pleasure resorts to be found in the mountains, the great spring that is the source of the Sacramento river, and pleasant and comfortable as possible. Shasta, from the summit of which the beauties of nature were admired. On leaving Sacramento valley an intermission was given to allow the operator of the stereopticau to adjust his views, during which time Miss Kelleher gave a pleasing recitation. Resuming the journey, San Francisco was reached and many of the notable buildings of that busy city were thrown upon the scene. From there the audience was taken through Southern California, and the many famous winter resorts, orange groves, flower gardens, and magnificient parks of that wonderful section were portrayed. The lecture throughout held the audience spell-bound, and so deep was the interest that few realized when it closed they had sat for two hours viewing California, or perhaps more appropriately speaking, traveled all over that great state while still

THE FIRST POLICE SIGNAL. Crude Device Tried in Yonkers to Aid in Apprehending Hoodlum Thirty-five years ago Capt. Mangan. chief of the police force at Yonkers, for his own convenience rigged up an electrie contrivance, out of which grew the elaborate and comprehensive system of police signals and communication between station-houses at present in use. Post-Dispatch. In the early days of the war a rough gang of men and boys frequently took possession of the Hudson River railroad lepot and committed lawless acts. The police station was located in the town, juite a distance from the depot, and before a messenger could summon assistance the law-breakers would have lisappeared. Capt. Mangan thought agent and telegraph operator to run wire from the station to the police of fice. At the police end a bell and a dial were arranged. The latter had painted on its face two or three short messages, such as "send an officer." "trouble here; send a full force," etc. The indicator on the dial was made to move by a series of short jerks, caused by key taps, to the desired point on the dial. A practical electrician saw this crude apparatus at work one day. Six months later patents were taken out on the apparatus now in use all over the country, which consists of a box with a dial face upon which are indicated a number of routine questions and answers and the letters of the alphabet, by which any message may be spelled out, a crank being used at one end, the indicator showing at the other.
