

W. L. Bradshaw, Circuit Judge of the Seventh District, was born in Putnam county, Mo., September 28, 1858. His early youth was spent there, crossing the plains with his parents to Oregon in 1865. They located in Yamhill county, at Lafayette, where he received his preliminary education. In 1878 and 1879 he attended the State Agricultural College, and then entered the St. Louis Law School, graduating in 1881, and on his return to Oregon in October of that year, was admitted to the bar. He immediately entered into partnership with his father E. C. Bradshaw, which co-partnership continued until his father moved to The Dalles in January, 1886. He continued practicing alone in Yamhill county till March, 1889, and then removed here opening an office, and practicing until May, 1891, when he was appointed by Governor Penneyer to fill out the unexpired term of Judge Bird. At the election of the following year, he was elected for the full term of six years, expiring July, 1898.

He was one of the charter members of The Dalles Commercial and Athletic Club, and at the annual election of 1896, was elected as one of the directors, and later was elected president by the board.

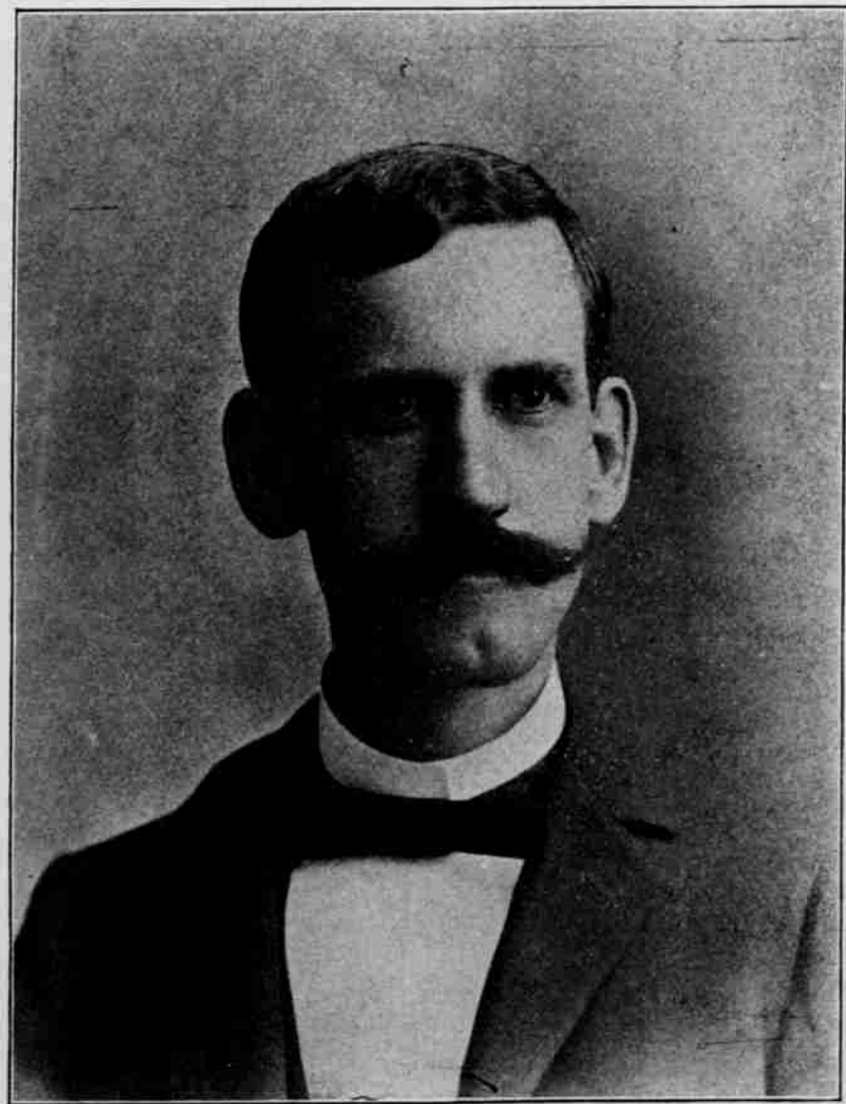

Judge Bradshaw is a man of sterling ability and attainments. Although an old school democrat, his career on the bench has won for him the respect and confidence of members of all parties.

JUDGE BRADSHAW.

A. A. Jayne, the prosecuting attorney of the Seventh Judicial District, is a man of exceptionally keen insight into human nature. In the court room he is suave and shrewd. Learned in the law, copious in ideas, ready with expedients and fluent of speech he scores great successes as a pleader. The prosecutor in a new western community must be to a certain extent a law giver. There are no firmly established precedents to govern him in the thousands of exigencies that arise. He must be a man of originality; he must have the courage to insist upon his convictions; and must have the external powers to convince others that his convictions are based upon proper interpretation of evidence, or construction of law. Among these lines Mr. Jayne could have few equals. He is a young man, having been born thirty-seven years ago at Washington, Iowa, where he received his education, which included an academic course. He began reading law in Edgar L. Jayne's office in Chicago, in 1885. In November, 1888, he was admitted to the bar in Colorado by the Supreme Court of that state, supporting himself by shorthand work in the interim.

Coming to Oregon in 1889, he located at Arlington, and began practicing with signal success. Was elected District Attorney in 1894, by the Republican party, of which he is a consistent member, and on the expiration of his term was re-elected with a larger majority. He moved to The Dalles in the spring of 1897, and associated himself with John Michell in the general practice of his profession.

A. A. JAYNE.

Probably no man in The Dalles today has more friends than E. B. Dufur. Born in Willamstown, Orange county, Vermont, March 6, 1843, he moved with his parents to Iola, Wisconsin, at the age of twelve, and then again in 1860 accompanied them to Oregon. He here finished his public school education by attending school in district No. 3, and later took an academic course in the Portland Academy and Female Seminary. His father, on his arrival in Oregon, had located about six miles from Portland, on the Columbia Slough, and the entire family stayed together, being engaged principally in dairying. E. B. was engaged in mining one year in the Boise Basin, with marked success, but sent the proceeds to his parents. In the summer of

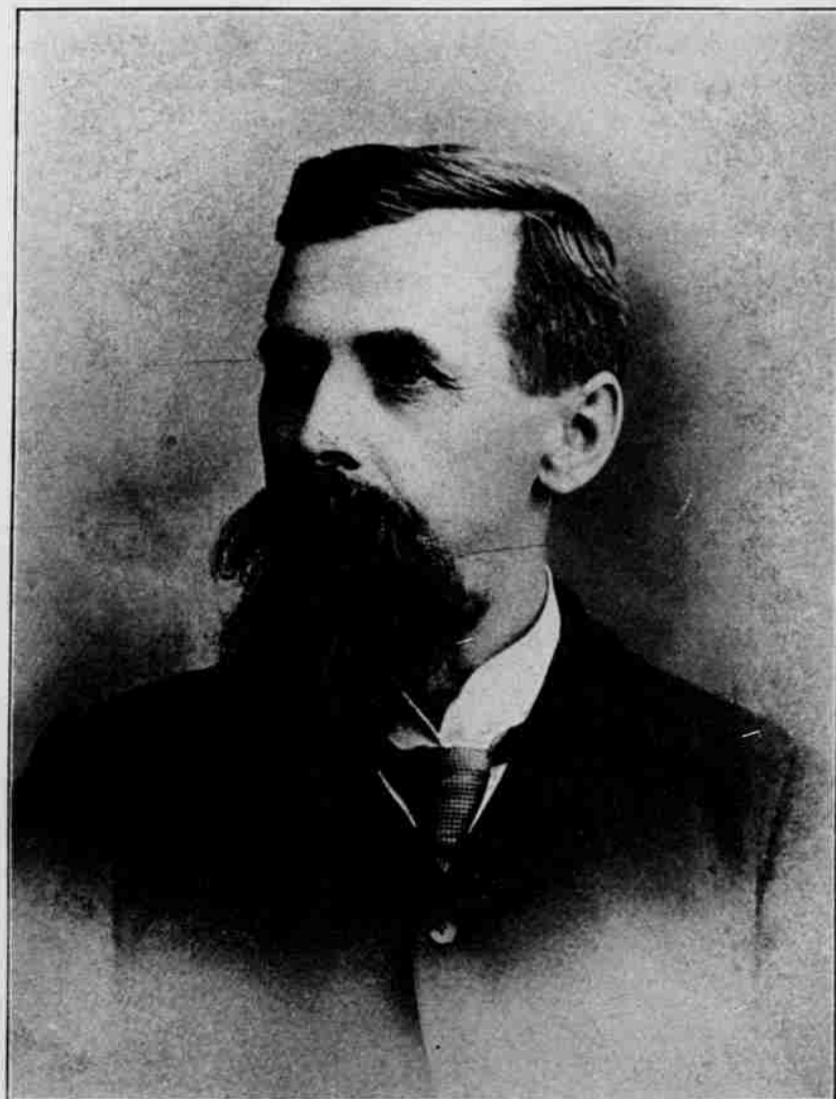

E. B. DUFUR.

'72 he and his brother, Andrew J, bought the Joe Beezley place on 15-Mile Creek, where the present town of Dufur is located, and became engaged in stock raising and farming, which occupation he followed until 1882, meeting with marked success. During this time he had been a hard and studious reader, inculcating the principles which must be familiar to one who appears before the courts as an advocate and representative of another's interests. Entering the law office of Killen & Moreland, at Portland, he was admitted to the bar in October, 1884. After staying a few months in Dufur, he moved to The Dalles, February 17, 1885, and began practicing. In '74 he was elected a member of the legislature from Wasco county, which at that time comprised the west portion of Morrow, all of Sherman, Gilliam, Crook, and the present Wasco counties, as well as the northern portion of Lake. He made the race successfully on the independent ticket, which movement was made in the interest of retrenchment and reform in the matter of cutting down excessive fees and expenses.

He has been a consistent Democrat all his life, being a firm believer in the principles of that party, and as its candidate has twice made the race for district attorney, but the district being largely Republican, was defeated in both instances by small pluralities; in fact, by only 31 votes the first time. In 1896, against his strong remonstrance, he was nominated by his party for State Senator for the district, comprising Wasco, Sherman and Gilliam counties. Making a strong personal canvass, he overcame the Republican majority of these counties, being elected by a margin of 21 votes.

His first wife, formerly Miss Francis Zimmerman, died January 30, 1880, leaving three children, Mrs. Menefee, Douglas and George Dufur. June 18, 1882, he married Miss Carrie Menefee, sister of his partner, and has two sons, Burnie and Kendall.

His face is a familiar one among several fraternal orders, being a member of the Maccabees, Knights and Red Men, having gone through every chair of the two latter here. Closing, we will state that he is greatly in love with his profession, and follows it closely, taking more pleasure in its pursuit than in all the honors and successes achieved in other fields.

JOHN MICHELL.

The subject of this sketch is well-known in The Dalles, having been connected with the Times-Mountaineer from 1882 to 1895, when he sold out his business to the present proprietor. As a journalist he enjoys the reputation of being a fearless and able writer, and has never failed in possessing the courage of his convictions. Under his editorial management the Times-Mountaineer was one of the leading Republican papers of the state; but, while a strong partisan, Mr. Michell always opposed bossism and the rule of cliques in political organizations. Coming to The Dalles in 1865, he has been from early boyhood associated with the growth and prosperity of the city. While following the vocation of a compositor on the Mountaineer and Oregonian he devoted his leisure hours in studying law, and was graduated from the Michigan University in 1877. Returning to The Dalles in June of that year, he began the practice of law; but, believing he could carry on journalism in connection with his profession, he associated himself with R. J. Marsh, in 1889, and became editor of the Times. The demands of journalism becoming very urgent he gave up a fair law business to devote himself entirely to editorial work; but never relinquished the idea of eventually returning to the practice of his chosen profession. As editor and manager of the Times-Mountaineer he was successful in establishing a powerful factor in the development of the northwest on a substantial financial basis. He is one of a very few newspaper men who have made honest journalism a paying investment. Mr. Michell enjoys a good reputation as a public speaker, has delivered addresses on different subjects before many audiences, and made the campaign in Wasco county, Oregon, and Klickitat county, Washington, for the Republican ticket in the fall of 1896. In June, 1896, he was elected to the State senate from Wasco and Sherman counties by the largest vote of any candidate on the ticket, although he was a pronounced advocate of the gold standard, and would not pledge himself for or against any man for United States Senator. Last spring he associated himself in the practice of law with Hon. A. A. Jayne, of this city, and we have no doubt he will soon have a high standing in the profession. Being a hard student all his life, he has acquired a good education, with some knowledge of the classical languages. Mr. Michell is a member of several fraternal societies, having passed the chairs in the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, the Elks, Red Men and Maccabees. In the last legislature he was a member of the senate judiciary committee and chairman of the committee on printing.

FRANK MENEFEE.

Associated with the foremost of the successful attorneys who practice at the bar in the Inland Empire, is Frank Menefee, who, while not so far advanced in years as many of his legal contemporaries, has been a resident of this city since it did not make the many claims to distinction, which it now does.

Mr. Menefee was born in The Dalles in 1866, and received his education at the Wasco Independent Academy. He began reading law in E. B. Dufur's office in 1887, and was admitted to the bar in 1889. After being associated with Mr. Dufur for several years, he became his partner. Nothing comes easier to Mr. Menefee than hard work, and that he has succeeded in his chosen profession is as much due to his untiring energy as to any other cause.

He is a consistent republican, and has held several offices, being elected city recorder in 1891 and 1892, and having been appointed to fill the unexpired term of G. V. Bolton, as mayor, in March, 1895, was elected in July, 1895, and again in 1896.

Mr. Menefee is a member of a number of different orders, but takes a particularly active interest in Pythianism, having gone through the chairs, and acting as D. G. C. for four years, and was a delegate to the grand lodge in 1894 and 1895.

Possessing unquestioned integrity and an ability and energy acknowledged by all who know him, Mr. Menefee has a future before him which promises honorable distinction.

DR. O. C. HOLLISTER.

Dr. O. C. Hollister, one of our leading physicians and surgeons, was born in Clinton, Iowa, thirty-six years ago. A graduate of the Chicago Medical College, Medical Department of the North Western University, he commenced the practice of medicine fully equipped with a fine technical education. He first began the practice of his profession with his father, a prominent physician of Iowa, and upon the latter's death removed to The Dalles, where he has been engaged in active practice for the past ten years. From the first he has enjoyed a large and lucrative business and possesses the entire confidence of the fraternity in Wasco and adjoining counties as is evidenced by frequent calls for consultation.

Dr. Hollister is a member of the American Medical Association, the Association of Military Surgeons of the United States, Oregon State and Mississippi Valley Medical Societies.
