The convention was called together at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, and evething went swimmingly until Pres ident Carey andounced the committee on credentials. No greater commo tion could have been created if he had applied the match to a powder house Henry McGinn was at once on his feet, and without waiting to be recognized by the chairman denounced the committeemen as being blacklegs and coundrels. This was a signal for the Mitchell men to defend themselves, and complimentary remarks were exchanged that did not have a tendency to lower the temperature. What might have resulted had not some one moved to adjourn until afternoon will never be known, but no doubt the motion saved many unpleasant things being said. When the convention re-assembled the hotheads had cooled down somewhat, and but little difficulty was experienced in adopting the report of the committee on credentials, the delegates generally being seated. During the recess some sort of a compromise was patched up between the opposing elements and Hon. Claud Gatch, representing the anti-Mitchell side, was elected president and C. W.
