THE DALLES, OREGON

PORTLAND, July 19.—The people of Portland are perplexed and puzzled. No one knows exactly "where he is No one knows exactly "where he is at." It all comes over the curious maneuvers of the new city administration. No sooner was it inaugurated than Larry Sullivan, a ward heeler of the dominant forces opens an all-night dance house in a building owned by State Senator Joseph Simon, who is regarded as the great factorum behind he municipal throne. Then the shit, machines were re-installed in the saloons and for a week Portland was wider open than ever before. Then came the removal of the slot machines, the closing of the dance houses, Sullivan's included, also the gambling dens conducted by whites and Chinese. The white gambiers are leaving town Sullivan attempted to re-open and was promptly closed; the Chinese caucus daily in throngs, and the Oregonian demands the closing of the saloon annexes where women are admitted through side entrances.
