For surely as nature abhors a vacuum in the outer world, so does it in the inner or higher life. There must exist in every one an entirety. If the positive or right elements do not develope them, the negative or wrong will germinate.

To call is to normal activity all the physical parts, the mental and moral senses and emotions with which the child is endowed, is the work of the kindergarten.

The body is not alone the temple o the mind and soul, but also a medium through which these speak to the outer world and through which the inner self reviews impressions.
