Paul! Paul! came from—of the Presbyterian-his bull's horn to the fissth from which, in the dark.
front Paul, swaying lightly out of the wind, and looking down at the boy below. "Are you coming?"

"Yes," said Paul, stepping out of the window.

'In another moment the two friends were leaping the timbers together. Presently they reached a large open field where a group of people were assembled to watch the filling of the balloon. People were posted on the neighboring fence surrounding the Minister LeClair, for the seed of which the balloon was to be used. Two men, who had been eagerly awaiting the invention, raised it into the clear sky.

"That's Mr. Jim, " said Paul, and Paul, who was highly favored by the people of the town, smiled and magnanimously offered to rise.

But the balloon almost ready—" said Paul, returning to his word, and the Presbyterian glided
without a sound.

"How splendid gas! " said Minister LeClair, looking at the scene. The gas was from the same flask as had been used for the experiment taken the day before. "Oh, Paul, " said the day," you just can't miss this.

And until you see the gas burning upon the earth—well, you'll run out of the blackness for a moment.

Paul followed Walter, found the line, and the balloon climbed higher and higher.

"You are so full of life, Mr. LeClair, " said Paul, and the balloonist, laughing at the impudence of the
proprietor, said:

\"What for?"

"Oh, you are so full of life, Mr. LeClair."

Paul smiled, but Walter laughed aloud, and the airship climbed higher and higher.

Then they entered the stratosphere, and their spirits were filled with the joy of the flight.

But before the
airship had reached a good elevation, Walter
shouted:

\"Paul!

The balloon had sunk low on the earth, and Walter seized a long pole, and stood upon
the pole, and cried:

"Paul! Paul!

Paul turned quickly, and, for a moment, was blank.

Then he smiled, and the
airship climbed higher
and higher.

\"What for?"

\"What for?\"

Paul turned quickly, and, for
a moment, was blank.

The balloon had sunk low on the earth, and Walter seized a
long pole, and stood upon
the pole, and cried:

\"Paul! Paul!

Paul turned quickly, and, for
a moment, was blank.

Then he smiled, and the
airship climbed higher
and higher.

\"What for?"

Paul! Paul! came from—of the Presbyterian-his bull's horn to the
fissth from which, in the
dark.
front Paul, swaying lightly out of the wind, and looking down at the boy
below. "Are you coming?"

"Yes," said Paul, stepping out of the window.

'In another moment the two friends
were leaping the timbers together. Presently
they reached a large open field where a group of people were assembled to watch the filling of the
balloon. People were posted on the
neighboring fence surrounding the Minister LeClair, for the seed of which the balloon was to be used. Two men, who had been eagerly awaiting the
invention, raised it into the clear sky.

"That's Mr. Jim, " said Paul,
and Paul, who was highly favored by the people of the town, smiled and magnanimously offered to
rise.

But the balloon almost ready—" said Paul, returning to his
word, and the Presbyterian glided
without a sound.

"How splendid gas! " said Minister LeClair, looking at the scene. The gas was from the same flask as had been used
for the experiment taken the day before. "Oh, Paul, " said the
day," you just can't
miss this.

And until you see the gas
burning upon the earth—well, you'll run out of the blackness for a moment.

Paul followed Walter, found
the line, and the balloon
climbed higher and higher.

"You are so full of life, Mr. LeClair, " said Paul, and the balloonist, laughing at the impudence of the
proprietor, said:

\"What for?"

"Oh, you are so full of life, Mr. LeClair."

Paul smiled, but Walter laughed aloud, and the
airship climbed higher and
higher.

Then they entered the
stratosphere, and their
spirits were filled with
the joy of the flight.

But before the
airship had reached a good
elevation, Walter
shouted:

\"Paul!

The balloon had sunk low on the
earth, and Walter seized a
long pole, and stood upon
the pole, and cried:

\"Paul! Paul!

Paul turned quickly, and, for
a moment, was blank.

Then he smiled, and the
airship climbed higher
and higher.

\"What for?"

\"What for?\"

Paul turned quickly, and, for
a moment, was blank.

But the balloon had sunk low on the earth, and Walter seized a
long pole, and stood upon
the pole, and cried:

\"Paul! Paul!

Paul turned quickly, and, for
a moment, was blank.

Then he smiled, and the
airship climbed higher
and higher.

\"What for?"

\"What for?\"

Paul turned quickly, and, for
a moment, was blank.

But the balloon had sunk low on the earth, and Walter seized a
long pole, and stood upon
the pole, and cried:

\"Paul! Paul!

Paul turned quickly, and, for
a moment, was blank.

Then he smiled, and the
airship climbed higher
and higher.

\"What for?"

\"What for?\"

Paul turned quickly, and, for
a moment, was blank.

But the balloon had sunk low on the earth, and Walter seized a
long pole, and stood upon
the pole, and cried:

\"Paul! Paul!

Paul turned quickly, and, for
a moment, was blank.

Then he smiled, and the
airship climbed higher
and higher.

\"What for?"

\"What for?"